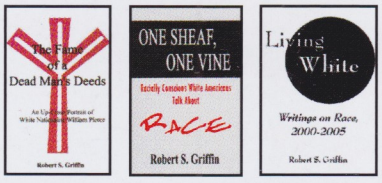
The Books of Professor Robert Griffin



The National Alliance is proud to offer all three of Professor Robert Griffin's books, as a bundle, for just $50 postpaid in the United States. By buying all three together, you will be saving 17% off the price if you bought them individually. Hurry, this offer will last only while stocks last.

FAME OF A DEAD MAN'S DEEDS: AN UP-CLOSE PORTRAIT OF WILLIAM PIERCE
This book presents the life and ideas of Dr. William Pierce, easily one of the most influential and intriguing figures of racial patriotism. He recounts Pierce's personal story from childhood on, identifies the books and people and situations that influenced the founder of the National Alliance. 434 pages —— Soft Cover Catalog Item: 1055 Catalog Price US $20.95

LIVING WHITE
Writings on Race, 2000-2005. Prof. Griffin has a distinct talent for discussing racial issues today, in various settings. This book is a collection of new articles that explore the dynamics of race in our society. Soft Cover, 168 pp Catalog Item: 1203 Catalog Price US $19.95

ONE SHEAF, ONE VINE: RACIALLY CONSCIOUS WHITE AMERICANS TALK ABOUT RACE
This book is made up of the personal statements about race from seventeen White Americans. What they share is that, for them, the fact that they are White is more than an incidental, insignificant, or peripheral aspect of their being; it is central to how they view themselves and conduct their lives. The men and women you will meet in this book are everyday people; a postal worker from Philadelphia, a college student from Texas, an attorney from New York City, a bookstore owner from Washington State, an appliance repairman from Connecticut, a teacher from Chicago, and so on. Catalog Item: 1091 Catalog Price US $12.50

Note from the Editor

Many thanks to all those who have submitted essays for our annual Dr. William Pierce "investigative journalism competition."

There have been many fine entries, and judging which are most deserving will be a trying task, given the extremely high quality of the items we have received. All entrants can be assured that we have evaluated each and every one and, we are glad to say, all have been worthy of publication.

Thank you for all your efforts, and together we look forward to building on the legacy which Dr. William Pierce left us, and turning his magazine into one of of the most powerful voices of our folk yet.

Together we are unstoppable....

The symbol which appears in the NATIONAL VANGUARD logotype is the Life Rune. It comes from an ancient alphabet, or futhark, used in northern Europe for many centuries before the general adoption of the Roman alphabet. The Life Rune signifies life, creation, birth, rebirth, and renewal. It expresses in a single symbol the raison d'etre of NATIONAL VANGUARD and of the movement of Aryan renewal.

Our Race - That for Which We Fight

By Richard Preston

If there is one thing that we in the National Alliance are known for, it is for our dedication to the concept and meaning of race as the single most pivotal factor in determining history and the very destiny of the earth itself. And we are known for this for good reason: it is because we do indeed understand that race is the very hinge upon which the door of civilization opens or closes. Race is the be all and end all of our very being itself; it is the driving factor which lies behind all achievement – and all degradation.

For without an understanding of race, and its implications for civilization, any people, anywhere, will be lost, rudderless in an increasingly rough sea which will eventually capsize and sink that folk. Our enemies – those who would see us destroyed – are well aware that any inkling of racial consciousness amongst our people is the single greatest threat to their plans which include our total genetic annihilation. This is why any manifestation of White racial consciousness is attacked, abused, denigrated, and dismissed by those who control the mass media, while at the same time they remain silent on the mass mobilization of other racial groups on specifically racial grounds – for example, Negroes, Hispanics, and, of course, Jews. It seems to be perfectly acceptable to have Jewish schools, Negro Colleges, and Hispanic Bursary funds, but woe betide any White who tries to start a 'European-American' school, college, or bursary. The heavens of hell will open upon that person.

Aesthetics — White Norm Still the Benchmark

The American writer Richard McCullough once famously remarked that if Classical European art had to come to life, if, say, the Venus de Milo had to morph into a living woman, all observers would remark on how beautiful she was. However, McCullough noted, if African art had to come to life, people would run away in fear and terror of the awful visage which would present itself. This aesthetic norm – unspoken even – is carried through to every level of society. The most rabid "African-Americans" who claim to actively despise White culture and civilization, make a mockery of their own ideological position every time they appear in public or publish an anti-White screed.

For the very things they use to publicize their ideology, the written word, the printed book, the Internet and "Black Entertainment Television" are the exclusive products of no other race except the devil Whites they profess to dislike. Even the very clothes they wear come from Western design – if they had to wear real "African" dress, they would wear either nothing, or, at best, untreated animal skins.

This extends even as afar as their physical appearance. What would observers say if one day, all White females either chemically treated their hair or put on wigs to make themselves appear to have peppercorn African hair? Observers would, correctly, presume that there was some type of crazy mass psychosis loose amongst White females, who, in their millions and as a mass group, were so unhappy with their physical appearance that they were prepared to risk serious chemicals being let loose on their heads in order to change their very appearance. Yet this is exactly what non-Whites the world over have done to themselves in an attempt to get away from the way they look naturally. Hair straighteners or, as they are called in the trade, 'hair relaxants,' are a multi-billion dollar business through which non-White females, as a mass group, change their physical appearance so as to try and imitate the White norm of long straight hair. It provides a deep and insightful look into the soul of race and those races who instinctively acknowledge which race holds the aesthetic norm by which all others are judged.

Finally, a fact which the "African-Americans" would be shocked to learn, is that even the very word "Africa" was given to them by the White Romans, who, after conquering Carthage after the Punic Wars, named the conquered territory – in modern day Tunisia – after the victorious Roman general, who happened to be called Scipio Africanus. Thus even the very word the "African-Americans" use to describe themselves was given to them by White people.

Technological Supremacy of the West

The great British explorer, David Livingstone, in his famous diaries, described how he entered a village in what is today Angola, in 1871, on his cart drawn by oxen. Livingstone describes in great detail how the entire village of some several hundred Negroes turned out in a long queue on the side of the path he was taking, astonished not only to see a White man, but equally as intrigued to see the wheels on his cart. At first Livingstone was slightly taken aback, but then he realized: "Negroes in Africa had, at that stage, only some 135 years ago, never before seen a wheel and its practical application."

This anecdote illustrates well the huge technological divide between the White race and all other races – even those races which are excellent imitators, such as the Japanese or Chinese peoples. For while the Chinese may have had a handful of important innovations which they shared with the West – such as the compass – the reality is that in all respects, when West met East for the first time, the West was massively technologically superior. This technological superiority continues to this day, with only the dramatically lower wages of the Far East ensuring that the manufacturing of such technology is carried out in those lands.

There is hardly an innovation on earth – from the mightiest rocket which took men to the moon, down to the humble paper clip, which was not introduced to this world by a White person. This fact is one of the more obvious and undeniable facts, which anyone browsing any sort of encyclopedia cannot help but notice. Yet still, because of the very obvious racial implications it holds, those who control the media and mass communication means, refuse to point out.

Who is the White Race

The most common form of attack by our enemies upon the concept of a racial world-view is to claim that race is only a 'social construct' and that there is no biological basis to race. Despite the patent absurdity of such a position being obvious, one would have thought, to anyone with even one working eye, this position has become vogue amongst the liberal elite, to the point where anyone even mentioning race as a reality in most academic institutions is likely to become the victim of official censure, if not downright physical attack.

Police departments, however, tend to forget this PC-dogma when they issue wanted lists, because then race is most certainly used as an identifying factor. And, of course, when DNA samples from crime scenes are taken, the subject's race is always one of the first results to be drawn. Even in the pre-DNA era, police forensic pathologists were able to determine race by simply looking at skeletal remains – making a mockery of the claim that race has no biological basis. However, there is one question which does deserve to be taken seriously, and which does deserve a full and proper answer: namely, what exactly is included in the definition of the "White Race." What physical characteristics are included – and, just as importantly, which are not.

Nordicists Started Racial Definitions

It is true that the first conceptualization of racial science was carried out by those Whites who could be classified as being racially Nordic in stock – in particular Houston Stewart Chamberlain and his supporters. As a result, for a long period – certainly long enough for our enemies to have taken the stereotype and to have seriously abused it in their propaganda – the concept of "White separatism" has been equated with a Hollywood creation of a blue-eyed, blond-haired 'master race' to the exclusion of all others. This myth is propagated, particularly at the expense of the German National Socialist movement, ignoring, of course, the contributions and leading roles in that movement made by specific non-Nordics such as Joseph Goebbels and only part-Nordics such as Hitler himself.

In the excellent book Into the Darkness by Lothrop Stoddard, which is the only unbiased English language account of the National Socialist state written by an American before those two countries became embroiled in the Second World War, the leading German racial scientist, Hans F.K. Günther, is quoted as specifically saying that Germany was not a totally Nordic country – but, like so much from that era, remarks such as those are swept under the carpet by the mass media propaganda mongers.

For the sake of definition, then, it is worthwhile to specifically define who is 'White' and, consequently, who is not. There are essentially four main sub groups of Whites in the world today, with two of those groups having distinct subdivisions.

Our Race -That for Which We Fight

Nordic

The Nordic racial group is characterized by a doliocraniac, or 'long' skull shape, tall physical stature and which is accompanied by light colored eyes and hair. The most ideal form of Nordic is known as the Halstatt type, after an area in Europe where the oldest such skeletal remains have been found. The Halstatt Nordic is characterized by fine features and nasal structure, and is most commonly regarded as the ideal "Nordic beauty."

Other Nordic types include Halstatts which have mixed with either Paleolithic age leftovers (such as the Borreyby type) or other elements, and can be broadly grouped under the "Celtic Nordic" type.

This group shares hair and eye coloring with the Halstatt Nordics, but shows slight variation in nose and facial shape, as a result of the non-Nordic admixture, in particular the "round" nose type which is in contrast to the pinched or 'sharper' nose type of the Halstatt type.

In addition, there are other Nordic related types, such as the East Baltic, which also share enough of a common physical appearance with the Halstatt types to warrant an inclusion into the Nordic grouping.

Alpine

The Alpine racial type is a distinct group by itself which has a more 'square' skull shape, and generally has brown eyes, which can range in shade from fairly dark to very light.

There are no subgroups within the Alpine group which display differences wide enough to warrant separate classifications, although, given enough time and effort, some racial scientist may be able to sub-classify some characteristics.

Mediterranean

This definition has of late become a loaded topic, because of the large number of differing attributes applied to the White Mediterranean grouping. This has come about because of the largely late 20th Century concept of the "Mediterranean" as being the home of anyone who has traditionally lived around the Mediterranean Sea – yet, as students of history will know, all manner of races and racial sub types have lived around the Mediterranean at various stages in history, and that simple geographical description by itself is highly unsatisfactory.

The large role played by ancient Mediterraneans in the establishment of the very first European civilizations has also often been deliberately ignored, particularly by the Houston Stewart Chamberlain era of Nordicists, while, on the other hand, modern Mediterranean nationalists have often objected to the equally valid assertion that the Classical civilizations declined due to the dissolution of their founding populations.

In any event, it is possible to define Mediterraneans into two groups: they both share the dark hair and dark eyes of that group, but the skull shape can vary between 'long' and 'square' depending upon the specific ancestry of the group in question.

Dinaric

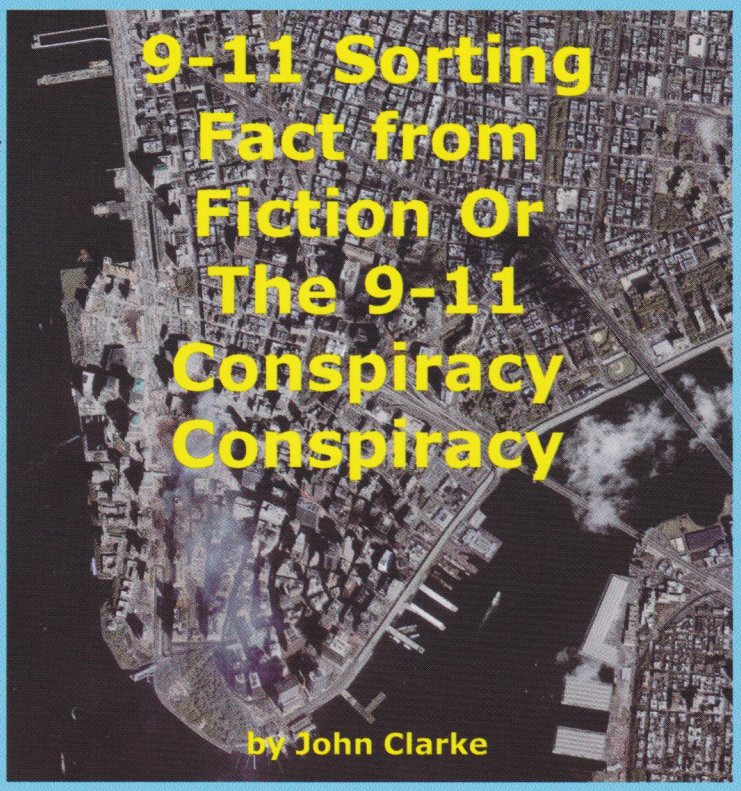
The Dinaric race's name derives from the Dinaric Alps (the western part of the Balkan Peninsula) which was its principal habitat. Dinaric characteristics are defined as tall, mostly mesomorph bodily build, with relatively long legs and short trunk and a medium arm span. The overall anatomy of the head is brachycephalic to hyperbrachycephalic. The eyes are set relatively close and the surrounding tissue defines them as wide open and the iris is most often brown, with a significant percentage of light pigmentation in the Dinaric population. The nose is large, narrow and convex.

Hair color is usually dark brown, with black-haired and blond individuals in minority. Most members of the White race today contain elements of all of the main White subgroups, and this is the cause of the fairly wide variety of characteristics on display (for example, green eyes are most commonly the result of ancestral admixture between Alpine and Nordic stock, and not a distinct group on their own).

Our Obligation to Preserve All Elements of Our Race

With this definition in mind, which can be backed up by genetics that show only minor point differences on the genetic scale between most European nations, it is possible to not only define who our race is, where we come from and what we are. An understanding of who we are, combined with a clear understanding of the relationship between racial preservation and the continuance of our civilization, therefore, are the very core of our mission: to preserve and enhance all members of our race.

It is our obligation, our duty and our pledge. It is one from which we dare not draw back, at risk of being traitors to ourselves and all future generations of White children, all over the world.



Quite aside from the terrible tragedy that was the 9-11 attack on the World Trade Center, there also exist elements of comedy, irony, and conspiracy.

On 9-11, 2001, four aircraft are hijacked by 19 Arabs, some trained as pilots, mainly from Saudi Arabia. (Undisputed conspiracy to attack the U.S. for supporting Israel.)

The Israeli communications company, Odigo, officially reports that messages were sent by an unknown party to two Israelis, warning them to leave the WTC as an attack was imminent. (Conspiracy? Unbelievably coincidental Prank?)

On 9-11 several Israelis are arrested after they were observed laughing and dancing around gleefully while filming the WTC tragedy. (Conspirators? Israelis merely delighted to see the U.S. suffer?)

The FBI names the 19 Arab hijackers. Several of those named complain bitterly that they were very much alive and not in the U.S. on 9-11. (Conspiracy? Inept bungling? Mistaken identities?)

In retaliation the U.S. goes to war against its Taliban allies in Afghanistan, even though the terrorists were from Saudi Arabia. Later the U.S. would attack Iraq, whom it previously supplied with weapons of mass destruction, claiming a link to 9-11; something no longer claimed. (Conspiracy? Bungling? Taking advantage of a situation to promote a hidden agenda?)

One week after 9-11 several anthrax-laced letters are posted in the U.S., killing five people. The Anthrax turns out to be US military issue, probably posted near the Princeton University Campus. (Conspiracy? Bungled U.S. project intended to look like Arab conspiracy?) There is more – much more – of this sort of thing.

FACTS VERSUS SPECULATION

The above are mostly undisputed factual events, but a great many other peculiarities have emerged that look suspiciously as though the Arab pilots were not the only conspirators closely following the 9-11 attack. These peculiarities range from the purely factual, such as the tiny number of Israelis that died in the attack (only five of the 2,973 victims were Israelis and the number of Jews that died also appears low), to the "How is it that cell phones actually worked on board a moving aircraft at 600 miles an hour," where certain loud-mouthed conspiracy theorists are unashamedly clueless as to how cell phones actually work. Unfortunately, a good conspiracy theory can often be successfully accounted for by considering detrimental policies inflicted on the world by a Jew/Israel-subservient U.S. government.

U.S. GOVERNMENT TOO INEPT

This is on occasion put forward as one of the neatest "proofs" that the U.S. government was never involved in 9-11 conspiracies. The U.S. government is simply too inept to have ever pulled it off. The most elaborate claim is that the U.S. government demolished the WTC with pre-installed explosives.

Furthermore, the aircraft that hit the WTC and elsewhere were not the hijacked aircraft, these were switched for other aircraft cleverly loaded with huge bombs that could be clearly seen from the ground. In the case of the Pentagon, the aircraft was switched for a cruise missile. Passengers were presumably murdered by CIA operatives.

The number of conspiratorial claims that indicate U.S. or Israeli involvement in the 9-11 attack numbers about 100, varying from the plausible to the totally ridiculous. To any objective scientist or historian it is not a simple matter to separate fact from fiction as facts are often contradictory and the psychology and political bias of the participants (U.S./Israeli governments and conspiracy theorists themselves) can easily be suspected of playing a deceptive role in the process.

This varies from unconscious bias to overt motives, including a willingness to hide or distort data.

AN IMPARTIAL COURT OF LAW

The main parties that stand accused of a conspiracy are the following: - Arab suicide agents, mainly from Saudi Arabia, but also from Egypt, U.A.E., and Lebanon, none of which countries have been attacked in reprisal by the U.S. There seems no opposition to the theory that 19 Arabs conspired to attack the WTC on 9-11. - The FBI and other government agencies, who are accused of having prior knowledge of the attack, assistance in perpetrating the attack, or even planning the entire operation. - Israel and a number of Jewish groups, who are accused of having foreknowledge of the attack, profiting financially from the attack, or even providing assistance or planning the entire operation.

FREEDOM FIGHTERS AND TERRORISTS

One man's freedom fighter is another man's terrorist, as is usual in human conflict, but the treason charge is far more sinister and frightening, if true. Asking for opinion on these issues is singularly unhelpful in ascertaining the truth or falsity of the charges as opinions vary not only within the lay public, but even amongst eminent scientists, engineers, politicians, and top academics. It is the standpoint of this article that the only civilized and reasonable procedure is to adopt the time-tested methods as used in a court of law. Many politicians abhor this legalistic approach as they find the notion of themselves being judged fundamentally unacceptable. Accusations of "anti-Semitism" and "anti-patriotism" abound while inconvenient facts are minimized by all political means possible, which of course only fans the flames of conspiracy theorists.

THE 20 GREATEST CONSPIRACY THEORIES

Many conspiracy theorists also abhor this legalistic approach as it presumes the accused parties as innocent until proven guilty. Unfortunately, most conspiracy theorists find the evidence, as they see it, so compelling that permitting the accused an opportunity for defense is morally unacceptable. Despite making advance enemies on both sides of the fence, this legalistic approach is followed because it is the best known way of establishing the truth. A much abbreviated list of the conspiracy charges (only 20 are shown here as examples): Why has there been no real 9/11 commission or investigation, where the people involved are at least made to testify under oath? Why were the occupancy rates on the four jetliners in question, all at the unbelievably low amount of only 25 %?

How is it that a passport of one of the alleged hijackers, survived the inferno but 7 out of 8 "black boxes" were vaporized or damaged beyond use? Why did Donald Rumsfeld order F-16s to stand down, and to not intercept the aircraft that flew into forbidden airspace, which would have been the standard protocol? Why did Donald Rumsfeld, just months prior get the sole right to make a decision of that magnitude, when it previously fell on the shoulders of the chain of command?

Why did NORRAD reverse standard operating procedure and fail to intercept the hi-jacked airliners, and how does that relate to the CIA drills, which were centered around crashing planes into buildings on the morning of 9/11? Why allegedly was the CIA conducting drills on the morning of 9/11 that actually involved the possibility of airliners being hijacked and flown into buildings? And doesn't this sound like a cop-out response to 'Why they reversed standard operating procedure' in the event of hijacked airliners flying into restricted airspace? Why was the wreckage of the airliners immediately hauled away and then melted down in China and India, before any extensive investigation could occur? How is it that cell phones actually worked on board a moving aircraft at 600 miles an hour, when they normally do not, as cellular coverage is virtually non-existent at that speed?

How is it possible that jet fuel, which is basically kerosene and burns at a maximum temperature of 800' degrees Fahrenheit, can melt structural steel, which needs 1800 degrees to melt or cut it? Why were there smoldering molten steel hot spots (at the bottom of the elevator shafts) with temperatures over 2000 degrees still burning red hot four weeks after the tragedy? Why did firefighters report bombs going off in the twin towers, which were also picked up by the local universities' seismologists, before the collapse of the buildings. Why do the firemen, who came to the rescue, feel the buildings were brought down with a controlled demolition, rather than a fire that could not have produced temperatures hot enough to melt concrete or structural steel?

Why does it appear, that when you slow the footage down, a missile (attached to the under side of the aircraft) was launched into the building just 1/3 of a second before the aircraft impacted? Why when examined closer does the "passenger aircraft," which slammed into the South Tower, appear to not have any passenger windows? Why did the air traffic controllers never receive the standard "distress call" from the pilots or the automated system, which had been set up to counter hijackings? Without the 9/11 attacks, would the Patriot Act have been passed? Had the 9/11 attacks not occurred would America have gone to war with Afghanistan and Iraq? It has been proven that Iraq had nothing to do with the 9/11 attacks, and that they do not possess weapons of mass destruction, so why then are we at war with them? Why was the Bin Laden family flown out of the U.S. immediately after the attacks?

(The above are the first 20 items on a much longer list constructed by "British74," an Internet alias.) Some of the charges laid should be quickly dismissed, such as (17) above, which, while probably true, does not logically infer pre-knowledge of the 9-11 attack. A charge of willfully abusing the highly-charged emotions of the U.S. public to ram through immoral legislation that might not have passed under normal circumstances could be laid as opportunism or even treason, but to prosecute such a charge as a conspiracy is not adequately supported by the evidence. But many of these charges are genuinely backed up by facts or highly suspicious anomalies. How is one to investigate such charges in a scientific and unbiased manner?

Firstly, let us clearly admit that no court of law is infallible. Innocent men have been hanged before and innocents will doubtless hang again in the future. However, experience has shown that a court of law makes relatively few mistakes, compared to any other known method of arriving at the truth. Because we are investigating at least 100 separate charges against a variety of groups and individuals, this method is likely to give the correct answer in almost all cases. Before a case can be brought before a court of law, a few preconditions have to be met in order to stand a chance of successful prosecution.

The accused should be shown to have: - Motive to perpetrate the crime. For example, for what possible reason would the FBI murder passengers, then swap aircraft and mount a missile on another aircraft when the buildings are already primed with explosives? This is not just overkill. This is plumb crazy.

Technical possibility of having perpetrated or assisted in perpetrating the crime. For example, is it technically possible to wire the WTC for demolition with nobody even noticing and reporting on such a massive project? Demolition company spokesmen have roundly stated that the supposed WTC demolition as described is not realistic.

Evidence that links the accused to the crime, preferably forensic – not based on hearsay. For example, when witnesses report hearing explosions (which are not in dispute), but then claim that the explosions were caused by plastic explosives which were set off before the aircraft hit. How do they know the difference in sound between a gasoline-air explosion and a Semtex explosion?

(Several people obtained medical treatment for burns after an explosion in the WTC injured them. Burns are a consequence of a fuel-air ignition, and are not associated with the detonation of a plastic explosive.)

How do witnesses know how long it takes the building to shake at the bottom after being hit near the top? Eyewitness testimony is generally the very worst form of evidence. Ask any Jewish Holocaust researcher. We need tried and trusted methods of sorting out the wheat from the chaff.

METHOD 1 - OCCAM'S RAZOR

Is the alternative story more, or less, probable than the mainstream story? The simplest argument should generally be closest to the truth. Where there is conflicting evidence and opinion, an accused should never be found guilty if an alternate explanation is more probable than the theory that would condemn the accused. In practice even significant doubt is a valid defense.

For example, in the theory that the U.S. Government rigged a missile under the aircraft that struck the first WTC building, is it more likely that the government would perpetrate such a complicated and risky action, or, as most photographic experts concur, that the suspicious blur underneath the photograph of the aircraft is a photographic anomaly based on reflected sunlight and camera lens properties. After all, the chances of such a device being observed by literally tens of thousands of eyewitnesses and millions of TV viewers would, in fact, make such a plan utterly foolish beyond words. Yet the conspiracy theorists will still try to claim this as fact.

The Pentagon Attack: How Conspiracy Theorists Lie

One of the most persistent of the 9-11 conspiracy myths is that an airliner did not hit the Pentagon, and that instead a cruise missile of some sort was used. The most common 'evidence' for this allegation is that there were no wreckage traces of an airliner on the scene. Despite this allegation being demonstrably untrue -- as these pictures of the scene, which even include an aircraft door -- show, conspiracy theorists simply ignore the evidence and continue to proclaim the 'missile' theory.

On the morning of June 22 in the year 1633, an old man stood in a room in the Convent of Minerva at Rome, and faced the Inquisition. Clothed in the sackcloth of a penitent, his face pale, his limbs trembling, he gazed timidly upon the grave faces of the assembled cardinals, as if in an attempt to read there the nature of his sentence.

At length, amid an oppressive silence, a figure rose from the ranks of the examiners, and in flat, colorless tones, began to speak — "But from all these consequences he is to he held absolved, provided that, with a sincere heart and a faith unfeigned, he abjures and curses the heresies he has cherished, as well as every other heresy against the Church . . . and that he shall be condemned to the prison of the Inquisition during its pleasure." The droning voice ceased. The venerable penitent fell on his knees before the assembly, and invoked the Divine aid in vowing never again to teach his heretical doctrines. These he enumerated, but the principal one which his trial had emphasized was the droll idea that the earth revolved round the sun. Then, with shaking hand, he signed a paper, setting out his wrong-doing. The assembled cardinals rose, and the penitent was taken from the room. As he walked away he is said to have muttered defiantly, "Eppur si muove" ("But it moves, just the same!").

The man was Galileo, a man of science, an astronomer, one of the world's greatest leaders in scientific discovery. Galileo was born at Pisa in Italy, in February, 1564, of a nobly-born father who himself was a philosopher of some attainments. The first picture we have of him is as a boy spending his leisure hours in the construction of little instruments and pieces of machinery, which greatly amused and stimulated his schoolfellows and himself. His father had already perceived in him the signs of latent genius and, though by no means able to afford it, enrolled him as a student of arts at the University of Pisa. This was in 1581. The young student was intended to devote his time to medicine, but a study of the works of Euclid turned his mind into other channels. Enraptured with the new truths which burst upon him, Galileo renounced medicine and, from the elementary works of geometry, passed on to the writings of Archimedes. His brain assimilated quickly and his observation was quick also. He investigated the reigning philosophy, the philosophy of Aristotle, and, with the enthusiasm and exultation of a youth of eighteen, he regarded its errors and absurdities, even then apparent to him, as his lawful, intellectual prey. He attacked the followers of Aristotle with a zeal that bordered on indiscretion, and when he found that they would not see his reasoning against their axioms, he appealed to direct experiment.

In 5583 he discovered, by watching the oscillation of a lamp suspended from the cathedral roof, the value of the pendulum for the exact measurement of time, for he noted that each swing was equal in time whatever its scope. From this time, too, dated his work on the hydrostatic balance. But his chief interest was in mathematics, and became professor in that subject in the university. It was then that he performed his famous experiment at the Leaning Tower of Pisa.

One of the axioms in the Aristotelian doctrine of mechanics was that the heavier of two falling bodies would reach the ground before the other, and that their velocities would he in proportion to their weights. The fiery young philosopher derided this. He maintained that all bodies will fall through the same height in the same tine if they are not unequally retarded by the resistance of the atmosphere. He gathered together some of the leading followers of Aristotelian philosophy, and showed them what he meant. With scorn written on his face, he ascended to the top of the leaning tower of Pisa, and let fall two objects of unequal weight.

His assembled enemies saw with their own eyes the two bodies strike the ground at the same time. Galileo, triumphant, descended and, with unutterable disgust, he heard the verdict. The Aristotelians coolly ascribed the effect to some unknown cause, and remained unshaken in their allegiance. Yet he had discovered an important principle in physics. They forced him to resign and retire to Florence, but in 1592 Galileo was appointed to a professorship at Padua. He was becoming famous all over Europe.

Then, in 1604, he turned his attention to astronomy. A new star had appeared, which was exciting the attention of the astronomers. Some said it was a meteor, while others were frankly puzzled. To crowded lecture rooms Galileo proved that it was not a meteor and that, like the fixed stars, it was situated far beyond the bounds of the known solar system. The subject attracted thousands to hear him. The benches were packed, and people jammed against each other, almost unable to breathe, in their determination to hear him. High and low were there, ruffles and swords, jerkins and cudgels, motionless, listening with bated breath. And still newcomers arrived and fought to force their way in, so that Galileo was obliged to adjourn to the open air. Galileo was now publishing his theories. He wrote works on mechanics, on motion, on the system of the universe, on sound and speech, on light and color.

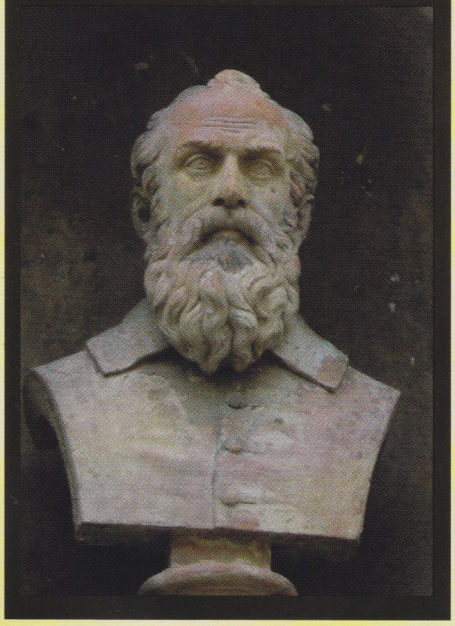
Heroes of Our Race: GALILEO GALILEI



Galileo Galilei was possibly one of our race's greatest scientific minds ever, whose name lives on as the astronomer who perfected the refracting telescope and who first showed us details of the planets and stars. He also was the first to prove the heliocentric theory of the universe, and remained unbowed when the establishment of the day, the Catholic Church, persecuted him for telling the truth. There are many parallels between this seeker of the truth and his defiance of the dogma of his day, and our work today.

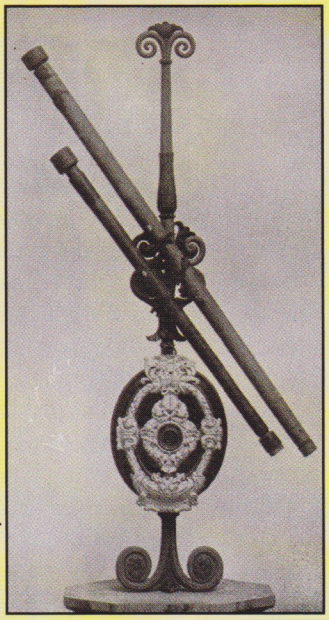
But it was in 1609 that the great sensation came. In that year Galileo heard of a curious optical instrument which possessed the singular property of causing distant objects to appear nearer. He experimented, destroyed what he had made, and tried again. At last he hit upon an idea. He procured two glasses, one convex on one side and the other concave. These he placed one at each end of a leaden tube. He looked through it . . . Eureka! He had made a telescope and opened a new and marvelous window through which to read the great book of the heavens. He carried the new instrument to Venice in triumph, and presented it to the Senate, who rewarded him by conferring on him for life the professorship at Padua, and raising his salary from five hundred and twenty to one thousand forms.

For months the telescope was a tremendous sensation. The excitement of the citizens amounted to frenzy. Hundreds flocked to his house to see the magic instrument. One day a friend of his ascended the tower of St. Mark's, where he could use the new device without interference. But he was recognized by a crowd in the street, and such was the excitement that they took possession of the wonderful little tube and detained the impatient experimenter for more than six hours, until all had seen its effects. And now, with an improved telescope, Galileo began to make the discoveries which were to astonish the world, change the science of astronomy, and bring all the troubles of his life in their train. He found, with incredible delight, " the ranges of mountains and deep hollows on the surface of the moon." In the dark silence of his little room at the top of the house, with the vastness of the heavens to explore, he discovered the number of the stars in the Pleiades, picked out the four secondary planets revolving round Jupiter, and received the first glimmerings of the position of Saturn and its rings. His discos cries, which he published immediately, raised a storm of protest, and Galileo found himself surrounded with enemies. Some struck at him by professing to have made the discoveries before him, others hastened to cry that his doctrines were heretical.

In 1611 Galileo went to Rome, where he was received with honor. Enmity had not yet accomplished its aim, for princes, cardinals, and prelates hastened to meet the intellectual giant of the age. He had with him his best telescope, and he showed these distinguished people his latest discovery, the spots on the sun's surface. Still, the ardor of the man's mind, his clear perception and fanatical love of the truth exasperated his enemies; and Galileo did nothing to soften them.



The original working model of Galileo's greatest invention: the telescope. With this breakthrough, our race's ability to explore and understand the heavens became a reality.

On the contrary, his character was such that, with almost reckless boldness, he sought to make proselytes of his enemies. It was a common sight to see him arguing and contesting—almost in the manner of the Renaissance disputes—with twenty or more people, most of them secretly hating him all the while. He let them talk, listened to them graciously, heard what they had to say one by one, and then, in a few simple words, he struck back. His enemies could do nothing but look at each other in confusion, or bite their lips, so foolish did he make them and their ideas appear. But now the Church was beginning to disapprove of Galileo's theories. A Dominican, Caccini, rose in his pulpit in his high, vaulted, Gothic Church, and reviled and ridiculed the astronomer and his followers in such terms that his hearers first listened in amazement, and then began to titter.

This attack was not approved by the Church, and the General of the Dominicans made a personal apology to Galileo. But Galileo refused to be warned by the signs of the coming storm. He went on. The whole conflict between Galileo and the church rose out of Galileo's defense and teaching of the heliocentric theory, which sets out that the sun is fixed and the earth in motion. The accepted theory in those days was that of Ptolemy, who taught a fixed earth with everything revolving round it in cycles and epicycles. The heliocentric theory had been proposed before by Copernicus, but with little proof, and it was not until Galileo saw the satellites of Jupiter and the movements of sunspots across the face of the sun that lie was able to defend the theory. He raised a storm of protest.

The defenders of the Ptolemic system declared that his theory was contrary to Holy Scripture. They quoted, among other texts, Joshua x, 13. "And the sun stood still ... in the midst of heaven," and Ecclesiastes i, 4, "... the earth abideth for ever. The sun also ariseth, and the sun goeth down, and hasteth to his place where he arose."

The discussion became more and more acute until, in 1615, Pope Paul V conveyed a semi-official warning to Galileo. In the following year, the theologians of the Holy Office decided that the theory that the sun is immovable in the center of the world and that the earth has a diurnal motion about it, was heretical, and Galileo was as admonished not to hold, teach, or defend the forbidden theory.

For a long time the astronomer made his observations and worked in silence. And then in 1632 he published his greatest work, The Dialogues. It caused a tremendous stir, but it was clearly an open defiance of the Church's ban, and, moreover, it was believed to contain a caricature of Pope Urban VIII. The sequel was inevitable. Galileo was summoned to appear before the Inquisition in Rome. At first denying the charges, he then admitted that he had defended the heliocentric theory, and admitted his fault.

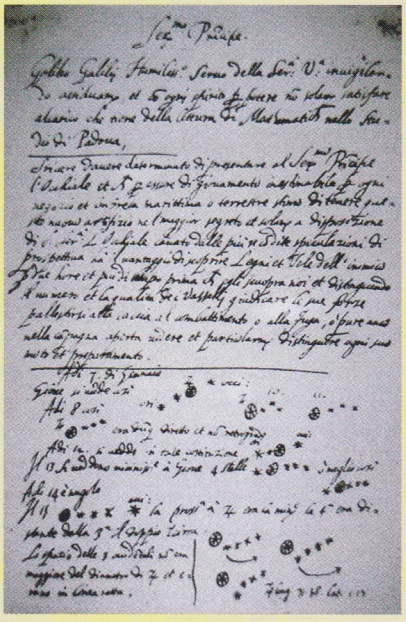
He was found guilty and sentenced to imprisonment; but instead, he was allowed to depart to Siena and eventually to retire, in strict seclusion, to his own villa at Arcetri. From the end of the trial onwards the life of Galileo was a life of tragedy. He knew that he was free, but soon after he had joined his family under his own roof, his favorite daughter was seized with a sudden illness and died. This blow worked deeply upon the philosopher, whose frame had been undermined for years by a malady contracted while young.

Yet he went on working. In 1636 he wrote his Dialogue on the New Science, which contained accounts of his early experiments and mature meditations on mechanics. In 1637 he made his last astronomical discovery, of those curious appearances in the lunar circle known as the moon's librations; a few months later he was blind. A sad, shrunken figure, nearly overwhelmed with the calamity but courageous still, he laboriously wrote a letter to a friend: "I am totally and irreparably blind. These heavens, this earth, this universe, which by wonderful observation I had enlarged a thousand times beyond the belief of past ages, are henceforth dwindled into the narrow space which I myself occupy. So it pleases God; it shall, therefore, please me also."

And still he went on. He applied himself to his scientific correspondence. He thought out the means of using the pendulum to regulate clockwork, a scheme which Huygens brought to fruition fifteen years afterwards. He was dictating his latest theories on impact of matter to his pupils, Viviani and Torricelli, when the end came. He had become a shell of a man, yet he was still grappling with the mysteries of the universe when he contracted a slow fever and died on January 8, 1642, in his seventy-eighth year.

Galileo's Notes on the Discovery of Jupiter's Moons

This is a page from Galileo's published discovery of the moons, which appeared in Sidereus Nuncius in March 1610. Probably the most significant contribution that Galileo Galilei made to science was the discovery of the four satellites around Jupiter that are now named in his honor. Galileo first observed the moons of Jupiter on January 7, 1610 through a homemade telescope. He originally thought he saw three stars near Jupiter, strung out in a line through the planet. The next evening, these stars seemed to have moved the wrong way, which caught his attention. Galileo continued to observe the stars and Jupiter for the next week. On January 11, a fourth star (which would later turn out to be Ganymede) appeared. After a week, Galileo had observed that the four stars never left the vicinity of Jupiter and appeared to be carried along with the planet, and that they changed their position with respect to each other and Jupiter. Finally, Galileo determined that what he was observing were not stars, but planetary bodies that were in orbit around Jupiter. This discovery provided evidence in support of the Copernican system and showed that everything did not revolve around the Earth.



TRANSLATION: "I should disclose and publish to the world the occasion of discovering and observing four Planets, never seen from the beginning of the world up to our own times, their positions, and the observations made during the last two months about their movements and their changes of magnitude; and I summon all astronomers to apply themselves to examine and determine their periodic times, which it has not been permitted me to achieve up to this day.

"On the 7th day of January in the present year, 1610, in the first hour of the following night, when I was viewing the constellations of the heavens through a telescope, the planet Jupiter presented itself to my view, and as I had prepared for myself a very excellent instrument, I noticed a circumstance which I had never been able to notice before, namely that three little stars, small but very bright, were near the planet; and although I believed them to belong to a number of the fixed stars, yet they made me somewhat wonder, because they seemed to be arranged exactly in a straight line, parallel to the ecliptic, and to be brighter than the rest of the stars, equal to them in magnitude . . .When on January 8th, led by some fatality, I turned again to look at the same part of the heavens, I found a very different state of things, for there were three little stars all west of Jupiter, and nearer together than on the previous night."

"I therefore concluded, and decided unhesitatingly, that there are three stars in the heavens moving about Jupiter, as Venus and Mercury around the Sun; which was at length established as clear as daylight by numerous other subsequent observations. These observations also established that there are not only three, but four, erratic sidereal bodies performing their revolutions around Jupiter."

Lessons in Nature

By Trevor Thompson

Having been long aware of the agenda of those who so thoroughly monopolize the mass media here in the States and the Western nations abroad, I avoid the television in favor of printed matter whenever possible. When reading even the most heavily slanted accounts of current events in the daily newspaper, it is still much easier to sift through the lies and find the few kernels of truth, if any are there to be found, than it is to pick out each and every falsehood in the rapidly-transmitted barrage of propaganda emanating from the glowing screen of your idiot box.

Despite Jewish media control being what it is, occasionally a program can still be found with a purpose other than the distortion of Aryan culture and the glorification of all that is base and degenerate in this world. On the Discovery Channel, I was fortunate enough to stumble upon one such program, a documentary about army ants.

I love Nature, and seize every available opportunity to deepen my understanding and insight into her lessons. It was also quite nice to catch a program that didn't promote race-treason, even if it was only because there were no people involved.

It is so fascinating to me to contemplate how structured the way of life is for many creatures within the animal kingdom, and ants are an excellent example of this. Not only does each ant play a certain role as a hunter, messenger, construction worker, or even nurse, but everything they do is for the benefit of the whole; the common good comes before self-interest.

While each ant contributes to the preservation and advancement of their little ant community by caring for one another's eggs and feeding the workers, the ants are also totally ruthless in wiping out any existing threats or prey. No inter-species "humanitarianism" there! I suppose that's why they call it "humanitarianism" when we fleece ourselves to subsidize Third World nations that will then create even more dependent non-Whites for us to feed: because we are the only animals under the sun who have lost touch with Nature's eternal laws.

We who would crown ourselves the most intelligent form of life on earth, guilty of the biggest blunder of all: ignoring the laws which are evident all around us, to which we owe our very existence.

And when I say "we," I am not referring to people in general, but to we Aryans, as none have fallen so far from what we once were. As history has shown with great clarity, the self-proclaimed "chosen tribe" emerged from "thousands of years of persecution" as a worldwide superpower, with the greatest of the goyim sacrificing its very blood for the interests of those who laugh up their sleeves as brothers of our kindred slaughter one another (and whether the "thousands of years of persecution" was the result of "envy" and 'inhospitality" or righteous indignation over the exploitation and corruption of the host nation at the bloody hands of the usurious world parasite is irrelevant here). This is a race with the ability to control how the world perceives it, to destroy its enemies and conquer those it perceives to be its god-given servants by pitting them against one another, and to make a mockery of the very values and strengths that made it possible for our noble kind to survive beyond the unmerciful ice fields of Europe, creating the most advanced cultural and technological accomplishments the world has seen, and arguably the only worth seeing.

The Asian people, while many of their achievements are built upon the foundation of our prior accomplishments, as Adolf Hitler rightly pointed out, are also among the species of life that sees no immediate threat to their future on this planet. Even the most backwards of the Negro savages are far from endangered.

As our misplaced pity coupled with their fundamental instinct to breed extremely quickly, has only helped them to the point where they will soon outvote us in our own once-White countries (not that the ballot box could repair all the damage we've wrought upon ourselves at this point anyway). Of course, parasites never outlive their hosts by very long. If we continue to freely distribute the fruits of our labor amongst the botched and misbegotten of this world, we will soon discover the hard reality that not all races suffer from the apparently hereditary sickness of compassion for those who would destroy them.

Well-Intentioned Humanitarians?

As well-intentioned as many of our humanitarians are, we must help them to understand that every cent given to America is dying, done for, kaput! Any childish illusions we have contrary to this well known fact do nothing but shield us from its ugly reality. The speed at which we are fracturing is astounding. The idea that was America is dead, our Constitution in tatters, and our future uncertain. America has ceased to be a nation in the truest sense of the word. We cannot deny this if we are to try and reclaim our once great nation.

We the people have been robbed of our sacred birthright and our republic has been transformed into a multi-ethnic empire. Far from being a strength, the multicultural model the elites in Washington have designed for America will sow the seeds of America's undoing. If one has any doubts about my thesis, examine just about any other multi-ethnic empire or "nation" that has failed the test of history. All fail, and will continue to fail.

America currently has a myriad of terminal illnesses that would spell doom for any country. Rampant corruption, abortive attempts at Middle East colonization, pagan idolatry (currently known as money worship), treasonous trade policies that benefit the transnational corporate elite while robbing the middle class of their wealth, and so on, ad infinitum. Here I will focus on the single greatest threat to American nationhood: multiculturalism. A nation can persevere through almost any internal or external threat, as long as it remains a nation, while an empire of competing ethnicities will quickly implode as soon as the empire's central authority begins to wane.

Nations differ widely from empires. Nations are a healthy expression of persons of similar race, with language, customs, heritage, culture, and history in common. Nations are a part of a natural evolution from a smaller tribal identity to a larger more powerful polity. Mutual defense against one or more out-groups is a primary reason for the evolution of the nation state, while economics and trade also play an important role. A true "nation" has always been comprised of a racially and ethnically homogenous people.

This is only natural when nations follow an evolutionary course as follows: Families evolve into familial-based tribes (or clans) based primarily on kinship, tribes will develop into a kingdom that is able to bring together many local tribes. The kingdom is the rudimentary nation with a common identity and racial, genetic, and linguistic tradition, and form a larger, and naturally more powerful political group than do clans and tribes. Kingdoms are, for the most part, nations. Super-nations like Russia and Germany were able to consolidate a number of kingdoms into giant nations that became some of the most powerful in the world. Even these super-nations were sustainable as their people were racially and linguistically homogenous.

Secessionist movements within empires are always of nationalist origin. A people with a common identity have a moral right of self-rule and self-determination. An empire, on the other hand, is an inherently artificial construct. Most empires develop from nations, but as they begin to take on imperial characteristics, they move towards their ultimate demise. Let me reiterate: empires fail. This is a rule of history. Empires fail because they grow beyond a level of long term sustainability. As empires ascend, they seem invincible. Empires are able to project military power over the nations they have subsumed. Military alone will not hold together an empire indefinitely. The only thing that will hold a large polity together is homogeneity. That organic sense of sameness and common purpose has held nations together throughout the millennia.

Conversely, it is the heterogeneity of empires that is ultimately their undoing. Empires have historically been multiethnic. By their very nature, empires will encompass numerous different nations of people with different ethnicities. The evolution from nation to empire creates this dilemma as ascending nations need resources and strategic positioning from a wide range of territories whose indigenous peoples are naturally hostile to rule by a foreign nation (in America's case, we are importing a foreign people as a resource to increase private corporate profits). A natural aspect of an empire is that the majority of its subjects are ethnically foreign from the ruling elite, the original nation, and foreign to one another. This therefore leads to a situation where the citizens of an empire have nothing in common but their common antipathy for one another and their rulers. Rival ethnicities will identify with their ethnic group rather than an unnatural government construct. Instead of working together in a productive communal way with shared goals and values, the citizens of empires will retain their national / ethnic identity and compete against each other and their imperial rulers. This is why multiethnic empires fail. For as Abraham Lincoln said on the eve of the southern revolution, "A house divided against itself cannot stand."

America is an empire. Any semblance of nationhood we once had is being systematically destroyed by divisive policies such as affirmative action, Political Correctness, and unchecked immigration from non-White Third World countries. As the White majority declines in number, we become less and less of a nation with a common identity and heritage and more of a multiethnic empire. As the number of non-Whites swells in America, assimilation is discouraged and ethnic politics become a staple of American life. It is estimated that by 2050 Whites will be a minority in America. At this point, if not before, America as we know it will be a distant memory. Our once great nation will have been transformed beyond recognition. I, for one, want no part of such a place.

> "Between each individual and entire humanity stands the Nation, with its special language and literature, origin, and history, manners and customs, laws and institutions, with its separate territory; a society, which, united by a thousand ties of mind and of interests, combines itself into one independent whole." - Friedrich List; 19th century statesman, philosopher, and world renowned economic theorist

Like all past empires, America is racial/ethnic tinderbox. We have only to ignite a single spark and the whole country could go up in flames. Anyone who thinks this can't or won't happen is deluded. Many of the great wars of history were wars that everyone knew wouldn't be fought. Something as simple as a natural disaster or an economic downturn (or a jury verdict for that matter) could set off ethnic riots and clashes that could decimate entire cities. This is the future for multicultural America. Don't turn your head from this ugly truth. The so-called melting pot theory is not working anymore and has been replaced by an ethnic salad bowl. Listen to the rhetoric of immigrants from Mexico who want to see the southwest U.S. ceded back to Mexico. Listen to the rhetoric of Black separatists, who want their own nation right here in the good 'ole' U.S. of A. White separatist ranks are swelling as they see their nation being browned beyond recognition, while the government passively strums its lyre. If you still don't think our diversity will ultimately destroy us, let's check the historical record.

Rome was destroyed not by foreign armies, but by barbarian tribes that were "Roman." In the West, Germanic subject tribes that Rome had once conquered severely weakened the empire with their constant rebellions within Roman territory. In the East, Emperor Valens allowed hordes of poor Goths fleeing the Huns to immigrate into his empire. Within 50 years, the Goths had sacked Rome and sent her nobles fleeing. The Goths didn't seem to appreciate Valens' magnanimity or their Roman citizenship.

As Rome burned, its subject peoples throughout the empire saw this weakness and clamored for self-rule and nations of their own. By the 5th century A.D., they got their wish. The Western Roman Empire was finished.

Other multiethnic empires have not faired much better. The former Soviet Union was torn apart by ethnic tensions. The Soviet Union was forced to squander its precious resources to keep peace among its disgruntled ethnic minorities. As soon as Moscow's power began to wane, its numerous subject people were quick to secede from the former U.S.S.R. and form their own ethnically homogenous nations, including, but not limited to: Latvia, Estonia, Lithuania, Belarus, Romania, Moldova, Ukraine, Kazakhstan, Uzbekistan, Turkmenistan, Tajikistan, and Kirgizstan. Vassal states such as Poland, East Germany, Hungary, and Yugoslavia also seized the initiative and reasserted their autonomy and right of self rule. If the Soviet Union had been comprised of an ethnically homogenous population (e.g. Russians only), it most likely would have endured. When Stalin first conquered all of these different nations with their own homogeneous populations, he had already sown the seeds of the eventual Soviet disunion. His subject peoples would continue to identify as Ukrainians, Latvians, and Byelorussians, not "Soviets." As can be seen, far from being a strength, "diversity" has historically been a lethal weakness.

Other multiethnic empires that have failed directly or indirectly because of their diversity deserve mention. Byzantium (Eastern Roman Empire), Austro-Hungary, Ottoman (Turkey), Britain, Mongolia, Arab Moor, Macedonian, Holy Roman Empire (German), and many others throughout history. Although many of the original ethnics who founded these empires still remain in name, none of these empires were able to hold together the diverse peoples within their borders, and eventually shrunk back down into nations possessing only their own single ethnic group.

Turks, Russians, Austrians, and English ethnics can attest that it is far easier to govern a homogenous population than a diverse one.

It shouldn't be lost on the reader that all of these empires were at one time the most powerful political organizations on Earth, much as America is today.

Far from being limited to mighty empires, many countries have recently been embroiled in ethnic as well as sectarian conflict. Here's the shortlist: The country is listed, then the conflicting factions in parentheses and finally, the result of the conflict:

UNITED STATES (White Europeans and Indians) = war, unprecedented genocide of Indians, rampant murder and pillage by both sides, ultimate segregation of Indians in concentration camps (reservations), and dependence on White Americans.

YUGOSLAVIA (Serbs, Croats, and God knows what else) = civil war, genocide, separation into multiple nation states.

RWANDA (Hutu and Tutsi) = civil war, genocide, separation through emigration of Hutus.

INDIA (Hindu Indians and Muslim Pakistanis) = civil war, eventual disunion with formation of Pakistan in northwest India, still some border skirmishes over disputed Kashmir region.

RUSSIA (Chechen nationalists and Russians) = terrorism, outbreaks of formal armed conflict, civil unrest, martial law, no-go zones for Russians, ongoing.

CANADA (Canadian English speakers and French-speaking Quebec separatists) = some terrorism, mostly mild civil unrest, political agitation, ongoing.

SPAIN (Spanish-speaking Spanish nationals and Basque-speaking Basque separatists) = widespread terrorism in Basque areas, civil unrest, martial law in Basque areas, ongoing.

IRAQ (Persian and Arab Shiite Muslims and Arab Sunni Muslims, Kurdish separatists in the North) = civil war of worst magnitude with innumerable casualties, genocide by Shiites and Sunnis against one another, currently occupied by foreign peacekeepers, such a country will not survive without totalitarian central government and will not ever constitute a true nation with its current borders, ongoing.

AFGHANISTAN (Afghans and a variety of tribal groups vying for power) = civil war, currently occupied by foreign peacekeepers, ongoing.

UNITED KINGDOM (Irish Catholic nationalists and Protestant Irish and English) = terrorism, major civil unrest, martial law in Ulster (Northern Ireland), currently a tenuous peace in place, ongoing ISRAEL (Jews and Palestinians) = civil unrest, segregation of Palestinians, genocide against Palestinians, martial law, intermittent outbreaks of armed conflict, ongoing.

SOUTH AFRICA (White European Afrikaners and Black native Africans) = major civil unrest and instability, genocide of White farmers, widespread racially motivated violence against Whites, emergence of White militia/mutual defense leagues as a result of rampant rape, theft, and murder by Blacks (Johannesburg is the only city in the world where you can buy rape insurance), ongoing.

ZIMBABWE / RHODESIA (same as South Africa) ongoing.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA (White Europeans, Black Africans, Mestizos from Latin America) = the future.

So how does this tragic historical record apply to America? As has been amply demonstrated, multicultural societies fail. Diversity is a weakness. Anyone who says differently is a fool. The failure of multicultural empires and countries is an immutable law of history. America is rapidly becoming a multi-ethnic dumping ground for the Third World poor. And they aren't assimilating. As White America's majority becomes smaller and smaller, we cease to be a nation in any real sense with any common identity, and begin to take on the characteristics of a multicultural empire. Already there are ethnic no-go zones in almost every major American city. Ethnic riots and civil unrest are just another fact of life for White Americans. Victimization of Whites by minorities is another fact of life. Although rarely ever shown in the mainstream media, crimes committed by Blacks and Mestizos against Whites are rampant and increasing in frequency. Over 10% of White Americans live in walled-off gated compounds to escape the savagery of the non-White hordes. As the non-White population in America continues to grow, White Americans can expect to be victimized with greater frequency and to feel less and less safe. Out of necessity, our once dormant sense of ethnic solidarity will be reinvigorated as we will have to "stick together" to protect ourselves. We can't run forever. At some point, we White Americans will have to stand together and fight. The question remains, can we stop this seemingly inevitable disintegration of our once beautiful nation, or will we Whites become just another nation within an empire, yearning for a land of our own?

As I have previously stated, America is dying. I have proven that this diagnosis is sound. The only question remaining is whether or not we can save our nation before it is dead and buried. There are a number of things that White Americans must do through our government in Washington. This by no means is an exhaustive list, but it provides an outline of a few things that MUST happen if we are to resuscitate America.

REGARDING THE MULTICULTURAL THREAT

(A) WHAT WE MUST DO ABOUT THE MEXICAN INVASION

Seal our borders now!! Those who say a wall won't keep people out haven't visited Israel, South Korea, or East Berlin (circa 1970). To say a wall won't work is a lie and those saying so should be publicly decried as liars and traitors who haven't the spine to uphold their oath to protect the Constitution of The United States.

Forget about comprehensive immigration reform and enforce the laws on the books. Arrest and put on trial employers who hire illegal workers. 500 arrests a week with televised employer arrests would send a signal that the slave wage party is over. Employers would miraculously begin to have American-born workers working for them. As illegals would find it harder to find work, many would simply go home where they belong. If the government can spend billions on enforcing anti-drug laws, certainly they can prosecute these employers.Deport every last illegal immigrant in this country, period. Americans would overwhelmingly support such a measure and would even agree to pay higher taxes to help the government achieve this task. To say this is impossible is another outright lie. We can deport all 12 million of them; one illegal at a time. If America can defeat the largest military forces ever known to man in World War Two, we can deport the illegals and uphold our laws.

Pass a Constitutional amendment whereby no child born in the U.S. to illegal immigrant parents can become a U.S.

Racial Preservation is Green

The National Socialist origins of the Green Movement will come as an unpleasant shock to the Greenpeace activists of today, writes Norman Lowell.

The Greens! - One has to admire their idealism. You will find them campaigning for the preservation of the shark, the whale, a snake or spider in deepest Amazon, or some little known lizard in New Caledonia.

Yet, when it comes to the preservation of the White race, Greens are virulently anti-racialists, screaming abuse and chastising anyone who dares defend its preservation and its progeny. That White race which has given humanity everything; from the wheel to space ships and computers.

Greens are on the forefront of every anti-racist demonstration, always alongside the "down-trodden Blacks" - no matter what. Often, not even having the decency to check the ever-growing complaints of alleged "discrimination" - by Whites against Africans of course. A blindness, a self-hate seems to afflict the Greens. They have become today's leading ethno-masochists.

Greens do not mind the mixing of that most civilized and advanced race, the White race - with that most primitive of all races; the Negroid. In fact Greens remain unconcerned on the burning issue of unlimited immigration. Whenever they can, Greens actually promote and encourage racial miscegenation. And it is always the same; Black males with White women.

Vienna's mayoral-election of March 25th, 2001 was a typical case. It was a concentrated and concerted campaign against the FPO, organized and orchestrated by the usual tribe, led by Ariel Muzicant. Haider's Liberal allies slyly participated in this political lynching while the Austrian Greens, showing the whole world how clever they are, fielded an African! Naturally, the ones that gained from all this were the Socialists.

Most of the Greens, as I said, are idealists. They go about in their willful destruction of their own race out of ignorance. They are what Lenin used to call; "useful idiots!" However, a few, in leading positions within the party, know exactly what they are doing. They are the conscious tools of the international manipulators - our hidden, most implacable enemies. Always scheming behind the scenes for the destruction of the White race.

National Socialists

Many Greens do not know the origin of their party. It may come as a bit of a surprise to them that the founder of the present-day Green party is none other than August Haussleiter. A National Socialist of the old school, a veteran who stood by Hitler's side during the beer hall putsch in Munich, at the start of Hitler's political career.

Haussleiter formed the Green party in 1974, organized it, was the first chairman, imbued it with the principles it now embraces - and was then booted out for his troubles due to his Nazi past! He was replaced by left-wing extremists and ex-communists of the Joschka Fischer type.

National Socialists were indeed the ultimate Greens. Their animal legislation, protecting animal rights, was the most advanced in the world. Hitler was a vegetarian since he could not bear the thought of slaughtered hens and cows. All those who knew him intimately or worked closely with him testify to this truth. He was a non-smoker and a teetotaler. A fanatic for the preservation of the countryside, a mere cottage spoiling a skyline or a valley would upset him.

Rosenberg, the party ideologue, was undoubtedly the world's first "Green," writing about the long-term effects on the race by increasing mechanization and even skyscrapers! He advocated the de-industrialization of Germany by concentrating industry in clearly defined and

Jim Ring's THE BELL

No Shoes, No Shirt, No Color: No Service

I started noticing at a very young age that generally speaking, there is a tension that Blacks have towards White people. I first encountered it in elementary school in the late 1950s observing the way Black kids interacted with the Whites. I didn't understand why they disliked or even hated us so, but it was quite evident. It didn't include all the Blacks but a large enough majority of them that one could make such a general classification. Also, this phenomenon was across the board. It didn't matter what grade you were in or what school you attended; if there were Blacks, there was tension...and resulting trouble. Most White kids did their best to ignore it and pretend it wasn't there and were encouraged to do so, especially by teachers and some parents, too. However, it was still there and only increased with age.

It was so strange to me because I never felt animosity for any person of color simply because they were different from me. Admittedly, I found them to be a curiosity in that human beings could be so different physically and, in later years, I discovered that their brains are "wired" differently from ours as well.

My developing animosity came from the things they did and not from what they were. However, the common denominator of their race coupled with their unsocial behavior helped a healthy kid to build a profile of what one could expect from the average colored specimen. As a result, I had very, very few Black acquaintances, let alone friends growing up. The ones I did have were "too White" for their own kind.

Perhaps it was "in the air" so to speak via a combination of many variables. Such animosity seemed to come naturally for them and perhaps extrapolated through their parents' racism as there was much upheaval in our society up to that point.

Hitler had been defeated scarcely 15 years earlier and so few realized how our military victory had spiritually disarmed our entire race worldwide. This was a watershed event that effectively demoralized us from being able to stand up effectively for our interests. As a result, our people had won the war to become second class citizens in their own country. (Many of us experienced this second class status at very early times as I'll relate a little further on, and I hope by it to stimulate your own early memories.)

It didn't take long to start. The military was first to fall to integration. Then in 1954, the Supreme Court demanded racial integration for the schools. Afterwards, I'll never forget the scene of White girls being pushed into the Little Rock High School by federal troops at bayonet point. Soon after that, snappy Negro entertainers with straightened, slicked back hair were "coming to dinner" through our television receivers, while our people sat there soaking it in while eating their TV dinners. The 1960s were now into full swing and we hadn't seen anything yet.

Some years later, in 1964 at the age of 11, I was to accompany my grandmother on a long bus trip from Pennsylvania to the mountains of West Virginia, her original home before becoming a part of the Great Appalachian migration when, in desperation, she moved along with my father and his siblings to the North in hopes of finding work. She was going to see a dying sister.

This was an exciting event in my life, as this was a chance for some adventure and to prove my maturity in escorting my grandmother on a long 600 mile trip. We boarded at the bus stop in our hometown for the long, long trip to Bluefield, WV, located at the southernmost part of the state. There weren't many passengers on this bus, but they increased and darkened as we neared the big cities.

Our first "port of call" was the city of Baltimore, a dirty city even back then and heavily populated with Blacks. It was a little unnerving to see so many Black people there as they outnumbered the Whites. I was used to seeing Black people at home in Pennsylvania, but at a ratio of 10 to 1 in my favor. I watched them moving about from my seat and wished I were back home. (Today my hometown in Pennsylvania is still about 10% Black, but since the turn of the century has become 35% Mexican in a few short years.) Home seemed so far, far away now even though we were scarcely 100 miles into the trip. It wasn't the time or the miles that made home seem so remote. It was the people. There were so few of my people. I felt as if I were in another world. Baltimore was at the edge of the "Twilight Zone." Grandmother and I were hungry, but felt uneasy leaving the apparent safety of the bus, as this crowd of Blacks at the terminal seemed to have a "wild" quality to them.

My grandmother fibbed and said she wasn't very hungry anyway and that we'd just wait until we got to Washington, DC. "That's the nation's capitol and the terminal there is bound to be a better place," she said.

After departing dirty old Baltimore, it was well over an hour later before we reached Washington. I had been to DC before on a school trip and remembered the great buildings and monuments. "Yes, she's right. The bus terminal there is bound to be alright. I remember seeing lots of White people at the monuments," I thought. "It had to be, I'm starving."

But the Washington of monuments; the capitol of the world's greatest country wasn't there on this trip. The route to the bus terminal seemed to take grandmother and me to a place that probably more closely resembled downtown Dakar or Nairobi. The monuments were only a few miles away, but in this dark and filthy place, they could just as well have been on the other side of the world. If Baltimore had been the edge of the "Twilight Zone," then DC was the center of this nightmare place. Not even the scariest episode of the famous television series of the time could outdo this hellhole.

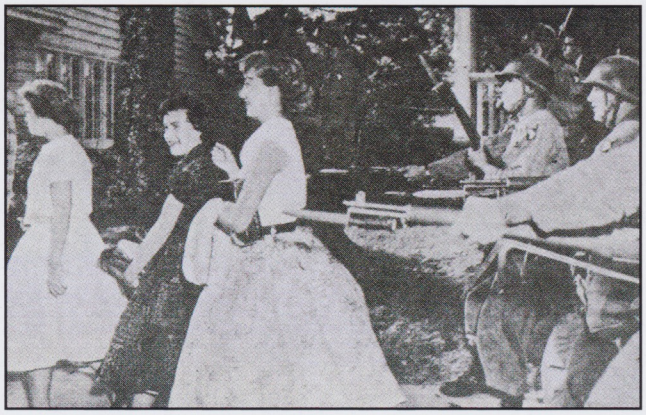
It was here that Grandmother and I were to change busses for one bound next for Roanoke, VA. This terminal was worse than the one in Baltimore. If Whites were outnumbered in Baltimore, they were scarcely existent here save for the bus drivers. We disembarked and searched for our next bus. Luckily it was waiting there and we immediately boarded early seeking the safety we felt it offered.

The terminal was teaming with Blacks; some just hanging around, some appeared to be drunk, others were acting strangely and wildly, and we didn't know what was wrong with them. As we slowly regained a sense of safety, our pangs of hunger once again returned with a vengeance. This place looked like a worse prospect for food than Baltimore did.

Grandmother proposed that we needed to stay on the bus and wait until we arrived in Roanoke. "That's a southern city and I'm sure it wouldn't be like it is here," she said. "How much longer will that be?" I enquired. The driver informed me that with all the local stops, we'd be on the road most of the night before we got to this Blue Ridge Mountain city.

My heart sunk. Grandmother had medicines to take and for that she needed food and drink, let alone she and I both were famished. I proposed that I just quickly go in and order some food and drink to take back out to the bus. Grandmother at first refused, but at my insistence she eventually relented. The bus didn't leave for awhile and I told her if I didn't return in a reasonable time, I would come back to show her I was alright or hopefully sooner with the food.

I left the bus and entered the dirty terminal. It was a huge facility. Once inside I found the lunch counter. It was the biggest lunch counter I had ever seen. All the lunch counters in all the drug stores in my home county put together couldn't match this one. A sign at the entrance stated, "No shirt, no shoes…No service." I can say in all honesty that entering this domain of Negroes didn't particularly frighten me, but I was wary and on alert. However, in the next few minutes, that changed.



Virtually all the seats at this huge counter were taken; all occupied by mostly Black men who noticed me with at best indifference and at worst icy stares. I heard some of them chuckling to themselves and assumed their amusement was at my expense. All seats were taken, that is save one and I climbed up. What a strange scene it was being one lone White boy amid throngs of Black men wolfing down the cheap, greasy fare being offered up by a small army of Black fry cooks and waitresses.

The Black waitresses noticed me but didn't acknowledge my presence. I excused this as it was very busy. However, after a time they still wouldn't acknowledge me so I spoke up with, "Excuse me, please." Still I was ignored. I tried several more times with the same lack of response. I wasn't just White; I must have been to them a ghost for they didn't seem to see me. But I knew they saw me. I could see their look of disdain as they passed.

Some of the Black patrons began to notice and laugh at my inability to get service. Remember, this is 1964, the height of the so-called Civil Rights movement and while Blacks were invading lunch counters throughout the Deep South demanding that they be served along with Whites, in tandem they refuse and mock a lone White boy in our nation's capitol trying to order burgers and sodas from a similar lunch counter dominated by their people. However, if this Black lunch counter had been segregated and offered service to White people only in the back corner, I would have gladly went there so as to avoid these people who didn't want me bothering them.

But it wasn't that way, we were in the North, the nation's capitol, the place of all places one shouldn't encounter racial discrimination during this Cultural Revolution they touted was for "peace and brotherhood." I learned early that Blacks are much more capable of discrimination than us.

So there I was, Black men having a good snicker at the young White boy trying to get service from unsympathetic Black waitresses. One Black said, "Didn't you see the sign, boy, we don't serve Whites here." I didn't see any such sign; only one that said "No shirt, no shoes…No service." Did I miss something? Did it say, "No color?" I see brotherhood is when they want to eat at my peoples' lunch counters, but I can't get service at theirs? Now I understand.

limited areas. He was first to tackle the problems of pollution and its effect on future generations – this in the early 1920s!

In 1944-45, Germany stood alone against the whole world. Bombed mercilessly by thousands of allied planes, its industry and economy crumbling, National Socialists still doggedly refused to send German women to work in factories - as the Americans and the British did. Germans had a noble, mystical view of womanhood; that of bearers of the race. They would not envisage German women performing a simple, mechanical operation for thousands of times a day. National Socialism was indeed the ultimate Green party.

Origins

Today's Western environmental movement didn't begin in the '60s; it actually took root in the late 19th century among individuals in Germany, who today would be targeted by watchdog groups dedicated to monitoring the "extreme right." Whatever their political orientation, these hopeful romantics were no less dedicated than their modern-day standard-bearers.

Perhaps the most influential of these pioneers was scientist Ernst Haeckel. Considered by many to be the father of modern environmentalism, this fierce German nationalist and avowed social Darwinist is credited with introducing the term "ecology" into public discourse. In 1866, he defined this new field of study as "the science of relations between organisms and their environment."

Haeckel published a number of books articulating his Darwinist view that humans were intrinsically tied to the soil. His ideas resonated beyond his borders and years; the celebrated British author D.H. Lawrence would consider Haeckel an early influence on his thematic development and naturalistic prose style.

Haeckel was highly critical of Christianity for exalting people above wildlife. He reverently believed that the magnificent forests of his beloved Germany provided an ethereal bridge to a higher state of awareness. Yet his contribution to environmental consciousness cannot be dismissed. In her remarkable work Ecology in the 20th Century, Dr. Anna Bramwell declares that the well-known naturalist "enabled ecology to become a viable political creed."

The First World War

Haeckel's earth-centered weltanschauung took on greater importance following the horrors of the First World War, which sent millions of soldiers to the graveyard or horrible permanent disability. It also left massive chunks of sublime countryside barren, pockmarked, and infertile from artillery barrages. Thus did the "war to end all wars" realize the worst fears of the environmentally minded.

For many, technology was the villain in this Greek tragedy of international proportions. The horrifying combat debut of large-scale artillery fire, machine gun, hand grenade, land mine, poison gas and other manufactured instruments of death provoked a widespread distrust of both humankind and industry.

By the 1918 armistice, many veterans, shell-shocked and reeling from the ghastly images of war, sought redemption the only way they knew how-by turning back the clock to the agrarian life of their grandparents.

This reaction to the war was manifested in Britain by the growth of many back-to-the-land movements, such as John Hargrave's crypto-fascist "Green Shirt" movement of the '20s and '30s. But after unsuccessfully attempting to gain support via the electoral process, the Green Shirts and other like-minded organizations were quickly doomed to obscurity.

This wasn't the case in Germany, where support for ecological views became widespread as salvation was sought in the anti-cosmopolitan, anti-technological "peasant movement."

Blood and Soil

Amidst the resentment and disillusionment that marked the inter-war Weimar Republic, a newly aroused Green awareness took hold. This loose amalgamation of new ecologists comprised a cross-pollination of Haeckel admirers, popular German youth movements, and adherents to Rudolph Steiner.

This new "peasant movement" took as its slogan a simple phrase: "Blut und Boden!" or "blood and soil," celebrating the virtues of heritage and the nobility of the pre-industrial agrarian way.

Steiner, an influential lecturer, firmly opposed artificial farming methods and served up eloquent encomiums celebrating the peasant's role in Germany's glorious future. His writings would greatly influence SS Chief Heinrich Himmler, Hitler confidante Rudolph Hess, and the man Bramwell considers the "Father of the Greens": German environmentalist Ricardo Walther Darre.

Walter Darre

Author of The Peasantry as Life Force (1928), and the seminal New Nobility from Blood and Soil (1929), the little-known figure quickly rose to prominence as leader of the post-war volkisch revolution. While he is now considered suspect at best for his pan-German racialism and links to groups supporting eugenics, Darre's environmental program is progressive even by today's standards. The World War I veteran wanted to see his world transformed into a planned society based on environmental ethics.

Charismatic and possessing a rare gift for organizational ability, Darre's radical influence among rural Germans quickly gained the attention of deputies of the National Socialist German Worker's Party (NSDAP) by the early '30s. Asked to promote National Socialism in the countryside, where Hitler then lacked popularity, Darre completed this task with alacrity; his efforts easily gathered peasant support for the Nazi party in North and East Germany. His successes were rewarded in 1933, when he was named Minister of Agriculture and Reich peasant leader.

Darre set up a peasant capital in the town of Goslar with progressive measures that empowered the farmer while preserving the soil. By 1940, Darre accepted Steiner's belief in biodynamic farming, and funded several such experimental farms. Darre continued to espouse the benefits of organic vegetation and soil conservation, but he was soon muzzled.

In 1942, completely out of favor with Hitler's cadre of handpicked advisors, he lost his cherished position as Minister of Agriculture. Nevertheless, up until the end of the war, he continued to criticize German agricultural methods and spoke passionately of creating his envisioned peasant state.

Darre was subsequently tried at Nuremberg for his demands that his countrymen be allowed to occupy the newly conquered Polish countryside. He was sentenced to seven years of imprisonment by the tribunal, but he continued to urge the merits of organic farming up until his death in 1953.

His advocacy was not in vain; our ongoing concern with the detrimental effects of pesticides and artificial fertilizers apparently proves that not only was Darre correct, he was ahead of the curve, espousing these beliefs some four decades before the issue became in vogue.

As is to be expected, today's liberal-minded Greens show very little admiration for Darre, although they continue to promote his collectivist beliefs and other elements of his agenda. The mere mention of his name provokes a combination of anger and resentment. However, even left-leaning environmentalists must grudgingly pay lip service to his contributions.

"It was largely Darre's influence in the Nazi apparatus which yielded, in practice, a level of government support for ecologically sound farming methods and land use planning unmatched by any state before or since," notes Peter Staudenmaier in his cautionary Ecofascism: Lessons from the German Experience. In a 1984 History Today article that Staudenmaier describes as "repugnant," Dr. Anna Bramwell goes further, noting that without Darre, "The ecological movement would have perished in his time and place."

"There's no way to preserve a species that's programmed to kill the planet," explains the manifesto of today's extreme Greens, represented by the Finnish eco-activist Kaarlo Pentti Linkola, who has often been accused of being an "ecofascist." He advocates involuntary sterilization likened the planet's population to a sinking ship clumsily attempting to seat 100 passengers on a lifeboat built for 10. "Those who hate life try to pull more people on board and drown everybody. Those who love and respect life use axes to chop off the extra hands hanging on the gunwale," he ruthlessly advises.

Right: Reich Agricultural Minister Walter Darre; and above; his direct legacy: Greenpeace activists.

To wield the axes, the onetime pacifist envisions the rise of a ruthless "Green Police" patrolling the wilderness, undeterred by what he derisively termed the "syrup of ethics." The fierce opponent of both Amnesty International and the Vatican advocates an end to economic aid for starving Third World nations and an immediate reversal of open-door immigration policies, specifically so that millions might perish.

Of course, this would constitute a mountain of human corpses unseen since the dark days of Mao's People's Republic of China, or Stalin's Soviet Union. But to Linkola, a few million deaths are of little importance when the entire planet is at stake. "We still have a chance to be cruel, but if we are not cruel today, all is lost," he admonishes.

Linkola outlines the central tenets of his credo: an unyielding skepticism of egalitarian democracy and an unwavering belief that unchecked overpopulation will kill our once-bountiful planet. The latter contention is not without merit. Recent estimates by the United Nations Population Division project a growth of over 3 billion people within the next 50 years. If the acceleration of births continues at its current pace, by the year 2150, an additional 6 billion inhabitants will threaten our imperiled ecosystem and obviously limited resources.

Therefore, Linkola would shed few tears if a few billion of us were to meet a quick demise. In the name of conservation, he consigns democracy, conventional humanism, and the principle of non-violence to the waste bin. Child limit would be enforced on all households. A fierce anti-capitalist, Linkola insists fishing and organic farming constitute the two primary occupations. Manufacturing would

How Much the Iraq War Costs the U.S. Taxpayer

A congressional analysis shows the Iraq war is now costing taxpayers almost $2 billion a week - nearly twice as much as in the first year of the conflict three years ago and 20 percent more than last year - as the Pentagon spends more on establishing regional bases to support the extended deployment and scrambles to fix or replace equipment damaged in combat.

The upsurge occurs as the total cost of military operations at home and abroad since 2001, including the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, will top half a trillion dollars, according to an internal assessment by the nonpartisan Congressional Research Service completed last week.

The spike in operating costs - including a 20 percent increase over last year in Afghanistan, where the mission now costs about $370 million a week - comes even though troop levels in both countries have remained stable. The reports attribute the rising costs in part to a higher pace of fighting in both countries, where insurgents and terrorists have increased their attacks on U.S. and coalition troops and civilians.

Mixed Race Children Most Likely to Have Social Problems

Multiracial youths were 63 percent more likely than White respondents to have been in a fight and 65 percent more likely to have threatened to stab someone.

African-American students, who held even with multiracial respondents for some violent behaviors, were 39 percent less likely to have hurt someone badly and 46 percent less likely to have carried a gun.

These figures are the result of research carried out by Yoonsun Choi, assistant professor at the School of Social Service Administration at the University of Chicago. The multiracial experience frequently corresponds, Choi says, with higher rates of violence and substance use. "Consistently multiracial youth show, in almost all behavior problems — alcohol, smoking, marijuana, fighting — more problems than other children."

In her survey, conducted among 10 to 14-year-olds at four public schools in lower-income neighborhoods, multiracial respondents were significantly more likely than their monoracial peers to have ever smoked; the odds were 38 percent less for White students, 32 percent less for Black students, and 51 percent less for Asian students. The probabilities remained similar for other substances too — when asked if they'd ever consumed alcohol or gotten drunk or high, multiracial respondents were much more likely than other groups to say yes.

TIME - new poll - Whites may realize they are an actual race

A new study on Whiteness and race relations by University of Minnesota sociologists shows that Whites in the U.S. are far more conscious of being White — and the privileges it brings — than was believed.

77% of Whites say their race has a distinct culture that should be preserved.

Whites are more likely to say prejudice and discrimination put Blacks at a disadvantage than to say those factors contribute to White advantage. And they are much less likely than non-Whites to attribute inequality to bias in the legal system.

Though Whites in the U.S. believe there remain advantages to being White, they don't necessarily link those advantages with Blacks' disadvantages.

Houston Wants African Blight out of City

Initially welcomed in the wake of last year's hurricane, Negroes from New Orleans have worn out their welcome in Houston. More than 1,700 residents of West Houston crammed into a church hall recently, demanding city officials take steps to return thousands of hurricane evacuees to New Orleans.

There was standing-room only in a West Houston church as local residents met with city officials to demand action. Immediately after the storm, Houston provided shelter and temporary housing for 250,000 New Orleans residents forced out of their homes by Katrina.

Now, it appears the 125,000 that remain are becoming more trouble than these residents believe they are worth. There is no doubt crime in the Houston area has jumped sharply higher since the arrival of New Orleans evacuees, many from some of the toughest and most violent neighborhoods in the "Crescent City." The overall violent crime rate has jumped 14% and in some areas, the homicide rate has doubled. The local police chief is promising to place another 140 officers on the street to combat the increased violence.

The Mexican Invasion Continues: Mexican Pledge in Texas School

Some parents in Freeport were livid after they said a Velasco Elementary School assembly included a requirement that children say the pledge of allegiance to the Mexican flag. The mother of one girl enrolled at the school told KTRH News she couldn't believe a school assembly would include children holding small Mexican flags and reciting a pledge in Spanish. "Where is the sensitivity to the men and women who have fought and died for this country?" the mother asked.

Brazosport District Spokesman Stuart Dornburg said, "A group of parents, who are volunteers, did get up on stage and recite the pledge to the Mexican flag ... the students did not recite the pledge.

The volunteers handed out small Mexican flags for the children to hold during the recitation."

Pro-White Populist Breakthrough in Swedish Local Elections

Sweden's latest local elections have shown a massive increase in support for the populist pro-White Sweden Democrats. They have won two hundred eighty seats in around half of the country's one hundred and forty municipalities, when they only had thirty places before. The party's stronghold is in the region of Skåne, in the south of the country, whose regional capital Malmö has a large immigrant population. The Sweden Democrats have won about 30 more seats than they have candidates, because of the proportional representation system which allots seats depending on what percentage of votes a party gets as a whole.

British Liberal Democrat Says Jews Control the West

Baroness Jenny Tonge, a former British parliament member from the Liberal-Democrat party, was invited for a clarification discussion with the party leader following outbursts she made against 'the Israeli lobby' at a pro-Palestinian solidarity event. "The pro-Israeli lobby has got its grips on the Western World, its financial grips. I think they've probably got a certain grip on our party," Tonge said. Senior sources in the Liberal-Democrat party expressed revulsion from her comments. Jewish and Israeli sources in Britain described her comments as being anti-Semitic, and pointed out that Tonge was removed from her parliamentary job in 2004, after she said she understood the hearts of Palestinian suicide bombers.

African Culture: Rwandan Negress Kills Child, Eats Foot for "Infertility Cure"

A Negress in the backward 'country' of Rwanda has confessed to killing a five-year-old girl and feasting on her foot in a bid to cure infertility. From her detention cell, Madeleine Mjawamariya told a local radio station that she was trying a home remedy for infertility when she enlisted a friend to help kill her neighbor's daughter, Ariette Mukamusoni, so that she could then eat the victim's remains to end her barren streak. "I was advised by an elderly woman that the foot of a kid would cure my infertility," Mjawamariya explained. Arrested along with her friend Judith Uwimana in Kihere, 70 km east of the capital Kigali, Mjawamariya was charged with murder and cannibalism. "After poisoning the child and dragging her to a nearby banana plantation, my friend held her neck and strangled her."

Whites Fleeing Negro-Ruled South Africa by the Million

One million White South Africans — a fifth – have fled that country in the past ten years. This figure was released last week in a report from the South African Institute of Race Relations (SAIRR). Frans Cronjé, who compiled the report, said it was especially crime and affirmative action which had driven a fifth of South Africa's White population out of the country. The SAIRR's population pyramid of White South Africans show a definite loss of young people and children under the age of ten. The figures for 2005 put the number of White South Africans in the country at 4.3 million, 841,000 fewer than the 5.2 million of 1995. Cronjé predicts that the White population would continue to shrink and, he said, the situation would have a far-reaching impact on the economy. "The White population is getting older, which means the White taxpayers are only going to contribute to the economy for the next twenty years. There would have to be a huge influx of skilled workers to fill this gap. This, unfortunately, is not the case." Educational levels of Negro children are unable to fill these gaps. Last year, for example, only 3,000 Black learners passed their final year of school with higher grade mathematics, said Cronjé.

Belgian Police Arrest Pro-White Patriots in Army

Seventeen people have been arrested in a swoop on pro-White members of the Belgian Army. There is at this stage no concrete evidence, but the Belgian police have alleged that the suspects — ten of whom were soldiers — are suspected of having planned violent attacks to "destabilize democratic Belgium." The main suspect — a soldier in the Leopoldsburg Liberation Regiment — is thought to be the head of the Flemish wing of a pro-White group.

New Ancient White Civilization Discovered

Archeologists have discovered a new ancient White civilization located in the Ukraine which apparently contains structures similar to the Egyptian pyramids, but which are thousands of years older. The prestigious Academy of Sciences has sent an expert to the dig site, and has said that they are of the opinion that this is the Ukrainian version of Stonehenge. It is claimed that pyramids are buried underground in eastern Ukraine. A team digging at a site near to the city of Luhansk has unearthed a huge religious complex. It has uncovered remains which are believed to date back thousands of years. The archaeologists say that clay plates, weighing each at least two tons, were arranged in circles and plastered over.

Pass a Constitutional amendment prohibiting any free social services to illegal immigrants. This includes public schools. For God's sake if there ever was a no-brainer, this is it.

Make English our official language.

Immediately pressure the Mexican government to overhaul their entire system to create opportunities for their citizens. Don't be afraid to get tough with these corrupt Mexican oligarchs. They need us a lot more than we need them, and they know it. If they won't do it voluntarily, their citizens will ultimately do it for them.

(B) WHAT WE MUST DO REGARDING THE BLACK QUESTION

(1) End all affirmative action hiring schemes, set-asides, and all the other anti-White discrimination in all areas of society. Affirmative action is unconstitutional under the 14th Amendment's equal protection clause and is illegal based on the Civil Rights Act of 1964. Such practices not only are illegal, but degrade our workforce and our universities by promoting less qualified applicants. The laws are on the books to promote a color blind, meritocratic system. Use them, don't abuse them. If you must, pass laws based on these principles and make them unreviewable by any federal courts. Congress has this absolute right. They should use it more often, or else our country will slide into oblivion because of unelected judicial activists. In addition to being illegal, these anti-White measures do nothing but foster resentment in Whites who are victims of this discrimination, further deepening the racial divide.

(2) State and municipal courts MUST start to equally apply their unconstitutional "Hate Crimes" laws to all citizens, not just Whites. Blacks commit 90% of all hate crimes against Whites, Hispanics and Asians according to the FBI's NCIS report. These must be prosecuted or it will serve as just another way to discriminate against Whites and once more foster resentment that will one day completely divide Black and White. When you look at history, such a divide may not be very pretty. Considering that White America is the most, well-armed civilian population in the world, Blacks might rue the day when they dreamed of revolution.

(3) End government subsidization of Blackness. End every freebie program, welfare, food stamps, everything. Let them sink or swim on their own. Involuntary redistribution of wealth is called socialism by some, but I call it robbery. Let voluntary redistribution happen naturally. Let the liberals put their money where there mouth is and support these people, not me. Stop aiding them in creating countless generations of government parasites and criminals. It is not only a waste of our precious resources, but is cruel and inhumane to Blacks themselves.

Such programs violate a fundamental rule of Nature that those who cannot meet their bare minimum survival needs must perish. Mother Nature will pay us back in kind when we disobey her immutable laws.

Part Two continued in the next issue.

Lessons in Nature

benefit the enemies of our people is treason. We must adopt the same philosophy as the army ants: we have no allies among the other races of the world, and there is no such equality: there are only our kin and the enemy, and self perpetuation is Nature's highest law, preservation and advancement of the species being merely an extension of this most fundamental instinct.

As can be seen from the recent events in Africa's Ivory Coast, when the interests of two races conflict with one another the colored hordes care not a wit about "fraternity," "brotherhood," or other such ill-conceived ideas, but only "us versus them." The hard either/or spoken of by the greatest European statesman of all time.

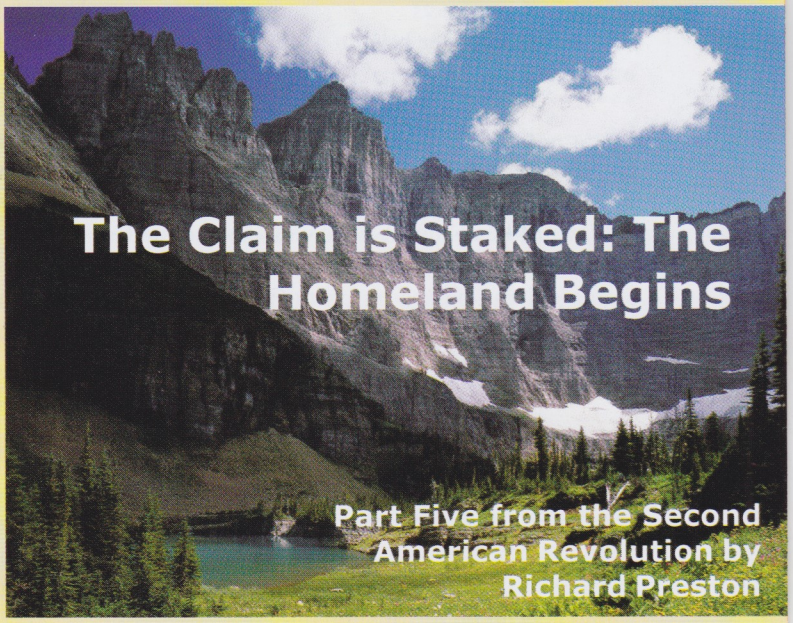
It is also worth noting that if the roles had been reversed and it were Blacks being forcibly driven from France, their women raped, and their wealth plundered, the Zionists and their lackeys that run our government today would take a much sharper position on things. The media outcry would he deafening, and we might even see another fratricidal conflict in which the best of our folk exterminate one another.

That this is true is easily demonstrated by the shrill reaction of the Jew-controlled media to the steady progress of the National Front. Though the media moguls could do well to take note that in spite of their usual wailing about "anti-Semitism," "France still enjoys the strongest support for any far-right party of any country in the European Union," to quote the Green Party's Noel Mamere.

All is Not Lost

How a race of conquerors, explorers, warriors, and entrepreneurs could relegate themselves to the position of servants in service of those who would use our nation as a soup kitchen will be a marvel for all time to come, but whether it will be us looking back on our past mistakes, or those who plundered the paradise we left behind sneering at our listing in the encyclopedias as an extinct species is still a question that those of us conscious of our people's plight still have some degree of control over.

All is not lost. History provides us with endless examples of how quickly the tides can turn. It is still up to us to determine by our actions whether our noble race will heed the lessons of the army ants or continue to steer for the fate of the dinosaurs. Responsibility for the outcome in this matter rests solely with us.



Although a long believer in the cause, and one of the few who understood that all of his previous activities – striking at the enemy in the heart of the nest which made up the ruling elite of Washington, DC and environs, the encrypted signal received by the Eastern Seaboard command was exciting in the extreme: it ordered the immediate evacuation of the entire armed unit of the White Liberation Army to the Midwest, where the senior command had managed to seize a territory from the Montana National Guard.

"This is the play of the game which will determine whether we are going to succeed or not," Stanton said to his second-in-command as they digested the news. "We will now come out into the open, and the battle will be taken face to face." Both men knew the implications: the time of the guerilla war they have been waging till now was coming to an end. Without territory, without an operating base, and without the ability to stake their claim openly and draw upon a large recruiting base, they would slowly but surely fizzle out as the war of attrition with the state slowly depleted their ranks. It was time to move.

Stanton nodded at his second-in-command, Peter Jones, the jovial-faced young man, only a few years out of college and who had given up what was promised to be a successful career with a major electronics manufacturer to join the WLA. Peter stood up and went to distribute the order.

Within hours, the same order had been received by all the WLA units across the country. Most of them responded immediately, leaving behind only the barest of infrastructures, some sealing up their underground bunkers and stores for the day when they would hopefully be able to formally occupy those areas again.

Slowly but surely, under the very noses of the state troopers and army units which had all been placed on standby as the conflict with the WLA had escalated into open rebellion in Montana, the scattered WLA units converged on the liberated zone.

The WLA high command had tried to ensure that the units entering the area could slip in unnoticed through the responding army units, banking on the increasing inefficiency of the by now largely mixed race army.

This hope was, however, somewhat misplaced: while certain army units did indeed not react as quickly as they should have, and others, even though in place, were not as vigilant as they should have been, by and large, by the time the majority of the country's WLA units got to the liberated zone, their path in was blocked.

The unit commanders congregated one night to discuss the way forward: the radio channel they had been using to communicate with the WLA command inside the liberated zone had been blocked and they were unsure what to do.

Stanton saw the puzzlement on the faces of the unit commanders – all good men and true, and all 100 percent dedicated to the cause. He, however, had a suggestion. Getting up, Stanton asked permission to speak. Although few knew him by name, all had heard of the strikes in Washington, DC and his fame had spread far and wide in the WLA as a man of action. They sat transfixed as he spelled out his plan.

"I propose that we divide our forces into two sections," he began. "We pick on the most heavily Hispanic army unit, here, the Texas 4th Infantry, which holds the position just south of the state line," he said, pointing the flags which dotted the map in front of the group.

"Speed will be of the essence. We divide our forces into two: a small unit which must be highly mobile, and the main body of the force, which must hold back. The smaller unit must launch a night hit-and-run strike on the 4th, and then withdraw as quickly as they can, but making sure that a significant portion of the enemy follows them. Peter, my 2 IC, has volunteered to lead the smaller column."

"As soon as the 4th is split, we will take the main body of our force and smash through them to join the liberated area, providing a rearguard for Peter's section to double back and rejoin us. It is simple, but I think our only option."

No one argued or murmured dissent: they all knew it to be true.

On the way back to their camp, Peter asked the one question which had weighed on everyone's mind: Why had the state not used a nuclear warhead to simply annihilate the WLA stronghold? The state was long past being squeamish enough to worry about any ancillary damage to surrounding non-combatants.

"It's a good question, Peter," Stanton said thoughtfully. "I don't know the answer, but there must be one. I suspect it may have something to do with where the WLA command has seized the first territory – did you notice that the B1-Bomber base in Montana is smack bang in the middle of it?"

The logistics had been carried out, and all the preparations were in place. By morning, the entire WLA militia outside of the liberated zone would be dead or captured, or they would be inside the zone with their comrades.

Peter waved to Stanton as the three hundred man-strong column passed by on their way north. "See you in Vallhalla!" Stanton cheerfully shouted back, provoking a guffaw from Peter's driver.

According to the timed plan, Stanton set off half-an-hour later, swinging due west for 40 miles before routing north once again. This would give Peter's column time to carry out its flying attack, and get going again. A lot would depend on whether the 4th took the bait or not. "Actually, everything would depend on it," Stanton mused.

At exactly the right time, Stanton's radio crackled into life. It was Peter's voice. "Bravo 14, this is Bravo 13. The cookie has crumbled, over." It was the signal for Stanton to move. The sound of gunfire in the background of Peter's transmission confirmed that things were happening at his end. Stanton gunned the truck into action: the signal for the rest of the column to gear up as well. They charged madly down the interstate, not knowing if they were riding into hell or heaven.

They had not traveled 20 miles before they had their answer: the interstate was completely blocked off by an entire 4th Infantry platoon. Fortunately, it seemed as if they were not expecting anything more than civilian motorists – although the line of trucks must have looked suspicious, but perhaps it was the darkness which helped. Stanton knew there was no turning back.

"Mach los," he whispered into the radio, using the German phrase for the convoy to prepare their guns for battle, hoping that any army scanner would not immediately understand the order.

As the truck drew up to the first ring of soldiers, Stanton slowed down, his Glock pistol ready in the door compartment. The soldiers were standing idly by, their guns slung over their backs. Obviously they had not yet heard anything of what was happening some 30 miles away.

Stanton counted the group: six in front, seven on the left, four on the right and the remaining 19 huddled round a campfire off to the rear. "James, you take the right group, Gene, the left," he said to the two men in the rear of their vehicle. They were both armed with AK-47s, which as an attack weapon in close quarters was still one of the best. Turning to his passenger in the front seat, Stanton told him to pick off any survivors of the first group.

He nearly slowed the vehicle to a stop as the commanding officer of the troops stepped up. Stanton looked into the young Mexican's eyes as he started saying in broken English that the road was closed and Stanton had to turn round. Without saying a word, Stanton reached down, pulled up his Glock and fired one shot into the Mexican's chest. He dropped without making a noise and Stanton hit the gas, swerving towards the other five of the advance group, collecting them all with a series of almost unbroken thumps on the truck's deer catcher. Simultaneously, the two rear men opened fire, and were joined in by the second and third vehicles. The three groups of soldiers fell like skittles, taken totally by surprise.

The remaining soldiers jumped up from their improvised bivouac and ran for their vehicles. This was the signal for the rocket propelled grenade gunner in vehicle four to let loose on the army's parked Humvees. In quick succession, he had all five in flames.

Stanton stopped his truck, jumped out and ran to the large army bed and trailer which was standing to one side. "Follow in our truck" he shouted at the men in his truck, and saw out of the corner of his eye that his passenger – clearly upset at not being able to get one shot off as Stanton had scooped up his quota of soldiers in the deer catcher – jumped into the driver's seat.

Climbing into the cab, Stanton kicked the vehicle into life, and swinging it around, aimed the 28-wheeler at the boom which the soldiers had placed across the road. It splinted the wooden barricade, and within minutes, the convoy was pouring through, following Stanton's new vehicle in a mad dash. They were through, and as long as Peter's crew made it around the lower end of the circle, they would make it as well. Only time would tell.

"It was as easy as hell," Peter said triumphantly, as they returned from the debriefing session. "Those Mexican soldiers had no idea what hit them and instead of actually forming any type of response unit, they just scattered, and although we went south for a bit, it became apparent that they were not capable of following us, so we just went back up north, hit them again and drove through, taking, of course, a bit of booty with us," he said, chuckling, waving his arm in the direction of the twelve bed and trailer vehicles he had brought with him from the army base.

Together with the one that Stanton had seized, the cargo of these vehicles had delivered six tanks, and a host of sophisticated weaponry, including four 50mm caliber sniper rifles, a host of automatic firearms, rocket launchers, and light machine guns – all urgently needed.

It had been a great success – and they both knew that the next step was to now start expanding the liberated zone. This must not be as easy as things had gone till now, Stanton thought, although not realizing exactly how true his prediction was going to be.

Jim Ring's The Bell: No Shoes, No Shirt, No Color:No Service

There must have been other White travelers on the busses who understood already, for there was nary a one who presented themselves for food here. Not all the Blacks were making sport of my predicament, some were just not paying attention or wanting to get involved and one even spoke up for me saying, "Alright now, enough is enough, why can't you just get this boy his order and leave him be?"

I was surprised, a kind intervention by a lone Black man, while it seemed dozens were leering and jeering. In the mass of their Blackness, I was transfixed to the sight of Whiteness of dozens of toothy smiles and pairs of widened, wild eyes; of bellowing, baritone laughter. I felt tears welling up, but I suppressed them with all my might. I was afraid and also suppressed any expression of it that they might detect, lest it set them off as if sensed by a pack of roaming dogs. To my memory, the individual Blacks involved remain faceless, but meld together as a collage of Negroid features of the crowd pressing me. I had never experienced such hatred before…me, a child…just because I am White.

Through it all, shaken as I was, I didn't give up, asking again for my hamburgers and drinks. Still they ignored me as if I wasn't there. Time was passing and it seemed futile and dangerous to continue pressing my case for service. I abruptly left and the sound of laughter diminished with each step away from the Black kitchen. Grandmother and I would go hungry for the long trip to Roanoke. I had tried but failed and felt the sting, not just in my stomach, but worse off in my psyche. I was struck with a burning sense of injustice and powerlessness.

Grandmother was terribly worried but so relieved upon my return. I quietly told her my story. I remember her saying, "Don't worry, we'll make it. Think of something else. We'll be able to eat at Roanoke. People in the South won't put up with such foolishness." Shortly afterward, the bus lurched forward out of the "Twilight Zone" world of "Africa on the Potomac."

"We're getting out of DC at last," I thought. It was the District of Columbia when I visited the great mall and monuments on my school trip, but now it was DC, the Dark Continent. People would always remark to me how they loved their visits to DC. I would reply, "You only know DC, the way people who go to Acapulco think they know Mexico. To really know DC one must come into close contact with its dark denizens. This is their realm and to do anything here, outside of the capitol district, you do so at their pleasure and your jeopardy. If you're lucky they'll only make you go hungry."

The sound of a powerful bus motor and the movement of lights gave me a feeling of relief after such a harrowing experience. Grandmother assured me that we wouldn't be making the return trip this way, as she would have my father come south to pick us up to go home. Out of DC into the countryside of Virginia the bus roared and, after some time, in the moonlit night, I could make out the silhouette of the Blue Ridge Mountains. As they loomed ever larger on our approach, I excitedly pointed them out to Grandmother. "Things will be different in this country," she said.

When we finally arrived in the small city of Roanoke, we were bleary-eyed and tired. We pulled into the bus terminal and I noticed straight away that things looked more normal here. The bus terminal was smaller and remarkably clean. The lunch counter there was much smaller, too, and it was a pleasure to see White faces once again. The waitresses and cooks and other service people were my people. The only Black employees were the janitors, and their attitude stood in stark contrast their brothers and sisters in Baltimore and DC. These Negroes were friendly and deferring. Perhaps the mountains were a barrier to the Cultural Revolution taking place away from their heights, as they were to our ancestors' progress in making their way into the heart of the continent.

To say we were famished would be an understatement. We took seats and gave our order to the friendly waitress who greeted us with her quaint Southern accent. We explained my experience to her and, after soaking in the shock of such a story, she exclaimed aloud, "My lord, sugar, how terrible. People around here wouldn't put up with such foolishness." I thought of how funny it was that this lady said almost the same thing as Grandmother back in DC.

Our next bus took us on the last leg of our journey over the ocean of ridges and into the jumbled mountains of southern West Virginia to Bluefield, a tortuous ride indeed that seemed as if it would never end. When it did, relatives were awaiting us to take us further back into the canebrake for our visit.

"Grandmother is right. Things are different in this country. It is beautiful here; everyone is friendly and always offering you something good to eat," I thought. A White kid could starve in the nation's capitol, but not here among my own people in these beautiful mountains.

It is a sad fact, however, as I would discover as the years went by and our people lost battle after battle; the people of the South and everywhere, did "put up with such foolishness," and thereby gave their own children the alien landscape we call America today with only rapidly shrinking pockets of White space left.

Just last year, on a trip to western Virginia's Blue Ridge Mountain region, I experienced first hand that these beautiful mountains couldn't hold back the invasion of sub-continent Indians and Pakistanis in so many of the small businesses from Luray to Marion. I was very saddened; even Appalachia is failing to hold the flood back.

No, the mountains cannot protect us. There is no place we can flee to. It is time to make a stand and muster the courage to FIGHT for our interests and our very lives, for our children's lives. If we fail to do this, the people with "No Color" will be, no people...we will be...no more.

9-11: Sorting Fact from Fiction Or The 9-11 Conspiracy Conspiracy

In effect, may a court of law condemn a suspect based on a smudge when there is significant dissenting expert opinion? Obviously not, in this case.

METHOD 2 - METHODOLOGY

Are the "proofs" offered for the argument well-constructed, i.e., using sound methodology? Is there any clear standard to determine what evidence would prove or disprove the theory? For example, in (10) above, it is stated as a fact that the structural "steel" of the building had been melted, whereas there is no proof of this as many different metals existed in the building and no forensic samples of melted structural steel exist. Even if such proof were to be provided, it cannot be proved that aircraft fuel was the only combustible fuel available in the building. A court could not convict based on such a succession of "ifs."

METHOD 3 - WHISTLEBLOWERS

How many people are involved in the conspiracy? Have any of them admitted to their role? The more people involved, the less plausible the conspiracy, unless some of these have made plausible confessions, of course. For example: the theory that all three buildings that collapsed on 9-11 were pre-wired with well-placed explosives in order to destroy the buildings whether or not the aircraft did the job. The sheer number of personnel and witnesses indirectly and directly involved in a gigantic project of this nature – the controlled demolition of several of the world's largest buildings – makes secrecy a virtual impossibility. This was not a wartime project where those involved were encamped in a remote location and monitored. Such a demolition project would involve engineers, suppliers, access to areas involving security personnel and building staff, it certainly required a massive budget and U.S. Secret Service involvement.

Despite such an operation involving at least hundreds of participants many of whom would later become very suspicious no matter how the project was camouflaged, not even one has come forward. The only witnesses are those who reported "explosions" for which there are alternate explanations (jet fuel-air explosions in shafts). The question is once again: could a civilized court of law convict based on such an improbability? Not only are there no whistleblowers, but many top scientists insist that the aircraft crash and resultant fires were perfectly capable of bringing the three buildings down.

The standards applied in a civilized court of law are very high. High enough that most of the 100 or so charges would be quickly dismissed – a few charges would proceed to be subjected to expert witness testimony and forensics. The question then becomes, "Which charges best reveal a motive and means to commit the crime?" (The Arab conspiracy to fly aircraft into the WTC will be neglected as that is not in dispute.) Here the very best charges are listed. It is probable that some readers would add to or subtract from this list. There may be evidence (supportive or debunked) that is as yet unknown to this writer. It must be pointed out in fairness that not even one of these charges would realistically result in prosecution in a civilized court. All they have in common is factual or statistical anomalies which should have been diligently investigated and exposed by the authorities, and were not.

Every one of these anomalies listed below suggests pre-knowledge of the 9-11 attacks, or at least pre-knowledge of an incident involving aircraft or the WTC Towers. Of the list below, only #1 has factual value that would stand up in court. This implies definite pre-knowledge by a group with very strong Israeli ties. Two Israelis received text messages which warned them to get out of the towers one hour prior to the attacks. Two recipients of messages and the messaging firm, Odigo, have confirmed that the warnings did take place and have allegedly cooperated fully with the FBI. The FBI investigation has announced no results as yet. The reason this cannot easily count as a conspiracy is because the two Israelis voluntarily came forward with their messages, and there is no firm evidence for the existence of any other recipients.

What happened to the rumored $167 billion dollars worth of gold that was stored in the World Trade Center? Doesn't it seem suspicious that only $200 million dollars worth of the Gold was recovered? Why has the FBI not investigated the information which was supplied by the German Computer company "Convar," which proved that massive insider trading had occurred on September the 11th exceeding over 100 million dollars? As it turns out, the criminals failed to realize that records of their transactions could still be recovered from the hard drives even after the main frames were destroyed. Convar restored data from over 400 hard drives, 32 of which provided evidence of insider trading. Newsweek twice reported that top Pentagon officials cancelled their flights into New York on the night of September the 10th. Who were these individuals and why did they cancel? Why were the seven Israeli Mossad spy agents (who were caught cheering and filming the attacks on top of a parked van) quietly released to Israel without any prosecution? How and why was Ronald Reagan Airport illegally infiltrated with over 100 Israeli spies who had acquired top security clearance passes on September 11th?

Why were they released without prosecution? It appears that many of the Jews who daily worked at the towers, did not show up for work on the morning of the 11th. Why was this so? How is it that several stockholders dumped their airline stock just days before the attack? How could several

Mossad agents have lived on the same streets as some of the hijackers and not have had any pre-knowledge of the attack?

ISRAELI PRE-KNOWDLEGDE ONLY CERTAIN FACT

The above charges imply a certain level of Israeli pre-knowledge about the attack, and possibly some U.S. government pre-knowledge. None of what has been offered as evidence thus far constitutes proof of conspiracy or proves direct financial or physical involvement in the attack. Not that an individual who may have had pre-knowledge is therefore blameless. Refusal to blow the whistle on this is tantamount to condoning the attack, as the arrested Jewish revelers were clearly doing.

But then, the only two Jews that were conclusively proven to have received prior warnings – actually did come forward and report this to the authorities. There may nevertheless exist a conspiracy of some sort by parties other than Muslim aircraft hijackers, but proof is dismally lacking. One cannot hope to successfully prosecute on this basis in a civilized court of law. Therefore such conspiracy accusations will, for the moment, be relegated to the well-meaning but ignorant masses, and to the lunatic fringes of society who fan the flames and might even ultimately succeed in proving their case should dramatic new evidence emerge.

Of course, the sticky business of proving who directly aided and abetted in the 9-11 attacks is not only technically confusing, but diverts our attention from what is really happening. It should be added: The U.S. government is the political dog that is wagged by the tail named Israel, on behalf of whom wars are fought and harmful laws promulgated. This argument transcends the 9-11 attack and cannot effectively be defended against in a court of law as there is a veritable mountain of proof. The U.S. government has consistently gone to war to defend Israeli interests and as a consequence has become the most hated country on Earth. To add insult to injury, the U.S. government has furthermore invited huge numbers of Muslims and other non-White inassimilables to live and work in the U.S., where they can do maximum damage with least effort.

This is racial treason, political treason, and religious treason, perpetrated knowingly by the U.S. government. That Israel visibly encourages and directly benefits from their imposed U.S. policies is an open act of war against the people of the United States of America. That local Jewish-American pressure groups promote slavish U.S. loyalty to the warped interests of Israel is pure and blatant treason. The lives of thousands of U.S. civilians and troops have been lost as a direct result of Jewish manipulation by AIPAC and other pressure groups.

BOTTOM LINE

Was Israel or the U.S. government involved in a 9-11 conspiracy? Any civilized court of law would have to decide that, "We simply don't know." There is not nearly enough evidence to successfully prosecute. Did the U.S. government follow treasonous policies in support of Israeli Interests that indirectly resulted in worldwide hatred of the U.S. and the 9-11 attacks? DEFINITELY, YES! There is more than sufficient evidence to prosecute on this basis! Did Israel deliberately manipulate the U.S. government through hostile, subversive, and manipulative means to create self-destructive policies that indirectly caused the 9-11 tragedy? DEFINITELY, YES!

And this is the REAL lesson of 9-11 which we should take to heart: Unless the suicidal Israeli-centric and anti-White immigration policies of the U.S. government are addressed, 9-11 is guaranteed to repeat itself again and again, in various ways, in a sickening, ever worsening spiral. The next tragedy is only a matter of time.

be overseen by the state, which would openly discourage technological research, and ozone-killing automobiles would be confiscated so that roads could be cleared for additional forest growth. Consequently, bicycles, and limited public transportation would return as the most popular modes of locomotion. Products would be created to last several lifetimes, with no exports allowed. As he has often stated, individual rights would give way to the rights of the earth, with his "Green Police" punishing miscreants who violate his beloved Gaia. Today, Linkola stands alone but determined. A one-man force of will who remains undaunted in his quest to end the desolation of the earth. Although branded an "eco-fascist" by detractors and openly despised by the more image-conscious activists, he is actually more of a traditional ecologist than his critics would care to admit. From a historical perspective, Linkola's books and articles resurrect a legacy of environmental consciousness that began over a century ago in the dark forests of Germany, where the first systemic environmental philosophy was formulated. In 1980, Rudolf Bahro, the East German dissident and later a leading exponent of Green views, discovered the positive side to Nazism and launched his idea that Europe needs an eco-dictatorship, an eco-Fascism - a Green Adolf!

A Green party that would stand for the preservation of every species - including and most of all, the racial preservation of the White race. For one cannot be Green and not be a racialist. Unless that is, one is either incoherent or intellectually dishonest - or both.

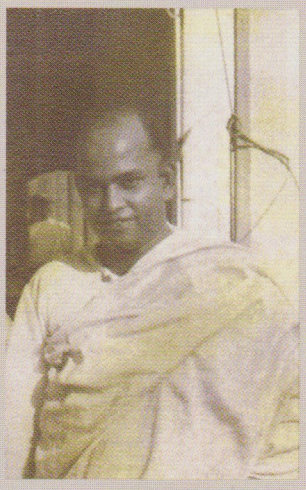
Savitri Devi Married a Non-White

Sir, - I noted with interest the reference to Savitri Devi in your magazine. She has long been regarded as "Hitler's Priestess" and a prophet of National Socialism. At the risk of irking many hardline National Socialists, I think it may be of interest to your readers to know that Devi herself was a race-mixer who married a non-White, and was, therefore, in practice the very opposite of a racially conscious National Socialist, no matter what she may have written in her books, which are, I will readily admit, striking works by themselves. However, her personal life was somewhat less than inspiring from a racial point of view. For starters, as mentioned, she married a non-White, one Asit Krishna Mukherji, in India (illustration), hardly the act of a committed National Socialist. Also, her general behavior indicated that she was not as ideologically sound as the post-war National Socialists would like to have believed. She maintained that she was converted to National Socialism in 1929 but, when Adolf Hitler came to power in 1933, she did not, as many foreign National Socialists did, go to Germany to visit that state, but instead ran off to India, allegedly to study Hinduism. Given the circumstances, this was peculiar indeed – it would be akin to a Canadian racial nationalist supporting the National Alliance and, upon the Alliance achieving a White homeland, then departing for South America. Once in India, Devi worked at a rescue home for non-Whites abandoned in the streets of Indian cities, finally actually marrying the non-White Mukherji. Only after the war did she decide to actually visit Germany, and there began her political career as a National Socialist. Peculiar, indeed, and I think I can be excused for taking claims as to her ideological soundness with a pinch of salt. – AK, VA.



The Confederacy – A Defense

Sir, – Your correspondent in a previous edition who took issue with the Confederacy and Abraham Lincoln refers. While I am forced to agree with the general assertion that the United States would have been better off with the Negroes being sent back to Africa, I feel your correspondent was being too harsh on the South: they were the most overtly racially conscious of all the Whites in the Americas at that time, and indeed, most of them did not even own slaves. The number of slave owners was always a minority of Southerners, and it is unfair to impute the sole cause of the Negro population to Southerners alone. In fact, in 1860, Negroes made up 14 percent of the entire population of the US, some 4,441,830 out of a total population of 31,443,321. The Confederates fought for far more than just slavery – there were other economic considerations and, of course, a distinct cultural divide between the Teutonic-settled North and the largely Anglo-Saxon-settled South. Finally, many historians have questioned if Lincoln was indeed sincere in his intention to repatriate the freed Negro population as he undertook, given his previously established record of saying one thing and doing another. – SD, GA

Focus on Negro Crime Problem

Sir, – Thank you for National Vanguard magazine, proof that Dr. Pierce's National Alliance is fine and strong and has survived his death. May I suggest a future in-depth article for the magazine, focusing on Negro crime levels, which is still the most unreported news item in the controlled media today. For example, more than one million Negroes are currently in jail or prison, and homicide remains the leading cause of death among Negro males between the ages of 15 and 34. In 1995, one-third of Negro males between the ages of 20 and 29 were under some form of criminal justice control (in prison, on parole, or probation). Negroes are at least seven times more likely to murder, be murdered and/or incarcerated than White Americans. The cost to taxpayers of this huge burden is enormous, and a well-constructed article on this could easily be used as a leaflet as well. – GH, OR

Why no Political Party?

Sir, — What we really need in America is a political party for who we can vote, much like the British National Party or National Democratic Party in Germany. Can the National Alliance not launch or create such a party? – DC, TX

(National Alliance Chairman Erich Gliebe will address this issue in detail in a future issue –ed.)

Jews Never Happy With Anything

Sir, — Can you believe this? Jews in Germany are actually blaming the German government for the rise in support for the National Democratic Party! Charlotte Knobloch, president of the Central Council of Jews, has blamed the existing Liberal parties for "failing to invest enough money in combating right wing extremism" and called the political parties "bankrupt of ideas." This despite the fact that the German government currently invests $25 million in propaganda campaigns against the German nationalists! Knobloch has dismissed this as being an "insignificant drop in the bucket." Isn't it incredible chutzpah? – FF, MD

Survival and Self-Defense

No man can defend his race who cannot defend himself and his family. As America's cities continue to become less civilized, her police forces more politicized, and her minorities more aggressive, the need for self-defense becomes more urgent. Beyond this is the question of making the necessary changes in America's government to restore it to its proper role as an agent of progress for our people. As President Lincoln remarked in his first inaugural address more than 130 years ago, the people who created the nation can, whenever they find the government not to their liking, exercise either their constitutional right of amending it or their revolutionary right of overthrowing it.
